End of Labor Hoarding Is Urged By Baruch

Recommendations Cover Manpower, Procurement and Draft Questions

By Ben W. Gilbert
Post Staff Writer

Far-reaching actions to end widespread labor hoarding and to bring our war production program into balance with the labor supply are urged in a second Baruch report made to War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes, it was learned authoritatively yesterday.

Bernard M. Baruch, adviser to Byrnes and head of the World War I War Industries Board, and John Hancock of Byrnes' staff, prepared the report during consideration of proposed manpower and production controls recently adopted for the West Coast.

Numerous Angles Covered

The Baruch-Hancock recommendations—reminiscent of the first Baruch report which served as the "bible" in untangling the so-called "rubber muddle"—are understood to cover questions of production, manpower, Selective Service, Government administration, and procurement policies.

The following major policy questions were covered by the report and subsequent discussion of its recommendations:

1. Fathers' draft: The War Manpower Commission order authorizing the drafting of fathers was needed to give the Government some control over half of the seven million draft-age fathers in the United States now engaged in less-essential activities. Selective Service should emphasize occupation, rather than dependency in granting deferments.

Draft-Dodgers' Haven

2. Farm deferments: The blanket deferment given agricultural workers by the so-called Tydings amendment has made the country's farms a haven for draft-dodgers and has permitted farmers to hoard labor. Provision should be made for a regular review of farm deferments, and farmers who have little work to do during the winter months should be urged to take seasonal jobs in war plants. Strict standards for the granting of farm deferments should be established.

3. The overall program: We can not get enough of everything and there is nothing to spare in planning the program.

This country now faces three alternatives: (1) arranging for more efficient production, (2) a curtailment of some phases of war production and (3) a review of civilian production programs to restrict the manufacture of nonessential goods. The belief was expressed that we are building up an oversupply of much war materiel.

Should Set Example

4. Government: An example should be set by Government agencies and Government production plants by cleaning house first

'Back the Attack'

NOTHING FEARSOME—A German Mark II tank, on display in the "Back the Attack" third War Loan Drive show sponsored by The Washington Post, is nothing fearsome to curious youngsters who climb all over the captured 10-tonner. Perhaps the script-lettered name explains its status: Snafu.

By Bert Kemmerer
Post Staff Writer

As "Back the Attack" rolled into its third day of performance, the vast significance of the Army's greatest show began to crystalize in the minds of those who watch America's tremendous war effort.

One hundred twenty-seven thousand citizens of Washington and visitors already have visited the equipment, supplies and those who man them on the Washington Monument Grounds.

On the clear, crisp autumn-like second night of the great show the high mark for attendance was set according to official estimate, Maj. Baird West, liaison between the massed acres of armament and Army and Treasury Department, announced. Thirty-seven thousand visitors were present. There were 25,000 at the day show. The first day's performances drew 65,000.

Speakers high in civic and official circles have brought their messages to the assembled thousands with each of the four regular performances. These men, vitally close to the swirl of the war's reality, already have included Eugene Meyer, editor and publisher of the Washington Post; Theodore Gamble, national director of the war finance division of the Treasury Department; Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson; Daniel W. Bell, undersecretary of the Treasury, and Raymond Clapper, columnist.

Each of the speakers brought out the significance of the "Back the Attack" display in connection with the Third War Loan drive.

May Suggests Draft Pause To Take Stock

By Edward Ryan
Post Staff Writer

Representative May (Democrat) of Kentucky, chairman of the powerful House Military Affairs Committee, suggested yesterday that draft inductions be cut down "until we get the home front adjusted to the war front."

"If we would let up in the induction of men—fathers and others—at least for awhile until we get the home front adjusted to the war front, that would be a gate to the solution of the problem of manpower," said May.

He suggested this solution in telling a Senate Military subcommittee investigating West Coast manpower difficulties that he plans to introduce legislation to delay the draft of fathers, "as soon as the chaplain finishes his prayer" when the House meets Tuesday.

Belt of Airfields Around Capital Also Taken by German Forces

By Edward D. Ball
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 10.—German troops shelled and seized Rome, its vital railway system and airfield belt today, the Berlin radio announced, in a frenzied effort to plug holes in an Axis rampart shattered by the Allied invasion of Italy.

Other important Italian cities, airfields, ports and warships were seized amid indications that the desperate enemy plans to install another puppet Fascist regime in that chaotic land.

(Bern heard an Italian broadcast early Saturday saying that all organized Italian resistance to the Germans in Lombardy ceased when the Italian Milan commander accepted an ultimatum delivered by Field Marshal Erwin Rommel. Gen. Vittorio Ruggiero, Milan commander, in a broken voice, said the Germans had taken over all important cities of Lombardy, and that anybody causing public disorders would be shot. Ruggiero said he accepted the terms of Rommel's ultimatum to save civilians from "grievous losses.")

The Germans began shelling the southern outskirts of Rome at 6 a. m., Rome time, causing Romans to believe that liberating Allied armies were fighting the Germans. But Allied headquarters dispatches said there was no indication of Allied moves in the Rome area.

A dispatch from the Swiss frontier to the Zurich newspaper Die Tat said, however, that it had been learned from Rome that British troops had landed at Ostia, port for the City of Rome, and were now fighting German divisions before the Italian capital.

Bombed Capital First

The Germans apparently first had bombed the capital, which Marshal Pietro Badoglio recently declared an open city, during the night. A Rome broadcast said unidentified planes caused damage and casualties in the San Lorenzo area—the same sector which the Allies previously had attacked.

The Germans under Field Marshal Gen. Albert Kesselring, com-

Italian News Agency Denies Abdication

London, Sept. 10.—German broadcasts insisted yesterday that King Vittorio Emanuele III had abdicated in favor of Crown Prince Umberto, but Stefani, Italian news agency, in a broadcast just before the Germans took Rome denied that the monarch had resigned, saying that he was "doing his utmost to save Italy from further suffering."

A Berlin dispatch to Bern's Die Tat said that "not a single member of the Badoglio Government or the royal house is still in Rome," indicating they might have reached an Allied haven.

Badoglio Called Upon to Help Drive Germans From Home Soil

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill last night called on Marshal Badoglio and the Italian people to join with the Allies in driving the "German invaders" from Italian soil.

"Now is the time for every Italian to strike his blow," the appeal said.

Sent to Italian People

A White House statement, given to the press shortly after midnight by Secretary Stephen Early, said the Roosevelt-Churchill message had been dispatched to "Marshal Badoglio and to the Italian people."

The message follows:

"It has fallen to you in the hour of your country's agony to take the first decisive steps to win peace and freedom for the Italian people and to win back for Italy an honorable place in the civilization of Europe.

"You have already freed your country from Fascist servitude. There remains the even more important task of cleansing the Italian soil from the German invaders. Hitler, through his accomplice Mussolini, has brought Italy to the verge of ruin. He has driven the Italians into disastrous campaigns in the sands of Egypt and the snows of Russia. The Germans have always deserted the Italian troops on the battlefield, sacrificing them contemptuously in order to cover their own retreats. Now Hitler threatens to subject you all to the cruelties he is perpetrating in so many lands.

"Time to Strike"

"Now is the time for every Italian to strike his blow. The liberating armies of the western world are coming to your rescue. We have very strong forces and are entering at many points. The German terror in Italy will not last long. They will be extirpated from your land and you, by helping in this great surge of liberation, will place yourselves once more among the true and long-proved friends of your country from whom you have been so wrongfully estrangled.

"Take every chance you can. Strike hard and strike home. Have faith in your future. All will come well. March forward with your American and British friends in the great world movement toward freedom, justice and peace."

Opportune Time

The Roosevelt-Churchill message was the first appeal to any people in Europe to rise against the Germans. It was beamed at Italy, now made a battleground by Hitler, at a time when the anger of the Italians against the Germans must have reached a peak of intensity.

Earlier in the day the Germans, ignoring the "open city" declaration of several weeks ago, had shelled and then invaded Rome.

Doesn't Mention Russia

Hitler Calls Italy's Surrender Event of Slight Importance

(Text on Page 9)

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 10.—Adolf Hitler broke a six-months' silence tonight in an attempt to rally the German people from the effects of Italy's desertion and, in a grim 16-minute radio speech, told them that that event was of slight importance and that the "ring of steel forged by the German home front will never break."

Although German soldiers may be forced to make tactical retreats and "we may have to cede some territory," the Fuehrer declared the Wehrmacht would be able to guard the nation from all assaults except the British-American bombing attacks.

"But here also," he assured his bomb-harassed people, "technical and organizational means are growing which will not only break the enemy's air attacks forever but will retaliate with other and more effective means."

The Fuehrer did not say when or how this would be achieved.

Nor did he offer his people any solace for the great defeats being inflicted upon the German armies on the Russian Front. He virtually ignored the Russian Front in this, h' first message to the nation since March 21.

Hearers here noted that Hitler spoke in a grim, military manner, devoid of the shouting and ranting that characterized his previous, longer harangues. It was presumed he was reading from a manuscript in his headquarters, possibly Berchtesgaden.

While professing to have "good cause to believe in victory," Hitler grimly warned that "every German must know that the fate of many German generations depends on his present attitude." He exhorted the home front to bear Allied bombing attacks with "unwavering, heroic resistance."

Thus the whole tone of his address was regarded as typifying Germany's new defensive attitude in this fifth year of war when the ramparts of the "European fortress" are crumbling.

Although he sought to dismiss Italy's capitulation as of slight consequence militarily, Hitler grimly vowed that the "treachery" of

Rumors Cloak Whereabouts Of Italian Fleet

Some Units Reported At Gibraltar; Nazis Claim Sinking of Some

By James F. King
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Sept. 10.—Berlin in confusing successive broadcasts today announced that an unspecified number of units of the Italian navy had "joined the German navy to continue the fight" on the German side and that an Italian battleship and a cruiser had been sunk and other warships damaged by German bombers between Sardinia and Corsica.

Meanwhile, from La Linea, Spain, alongside the big British base of Gibraltar, there came a report that two light cruisers, two destroyers and two auxiliary aircraft carriers of the Italian navy had entered Gibraltar and surrendered to the Allies at 11:45 a. m. today.

Two Other Reports

These reports, along with word that the Allies had seized the big Italian naval base at Taranto, turned the spotlight again on the mystery of the whereabouts of the once powerful Italian navy.

The Germans' confusing picture also included a report that Nazi bombers and dive-bombers had forced another unspecified number of Italian warships to return to the Greek harbor of Patras after they had attempted to escape yesterday. And finally another report said the Nazis had taken over the important Mediterranean naval base of La Spezia near Genoa, supposedly with most of the ships in the harbor.

Dispatches from Allied headquarters in North Africa said the brief announcement of the Allied landing at Taranto, inside the Ital-

Nazis' Flight Across Ukraine Is Near-Rout

Leave 6800 Dead, Abandon Materiel; Reds Take Mariupol

James M. Long
Associated Press Staff Writer

London (Saturday), Sept. 11.—Soviet columns raced through the Ukraine in pursuit of Germans retreating so rapidly along a 400-mile front that they abandoned huge stores of material, left 6800 dead on the battlefields and lost 310 towns and villages, Moscow announced today.

The Russians stormed into Mariupol, Sea of Azov metallurgical center and port with an air and sea surprise attack, captured Chaplino, 60 miles from the Nnieper River bend and in the northern Ukraine pierced the important Desna River line near Novgorod Seversky.

Is Near Rout

The German pace approached a rout as the pursuing Russians captured almost 1000 freight cars and trucks, many loaded with food, fuel and munitions. At least 62 German tanks were captured, destroyed or put out of commission.

A German military commentator said in a Berlin broadcast recorded by the Associated Press that the German withdrawal "was not likely to stop for some time."

In many sectors the Russians were cutting in behind the German lines, trapping the surprised Germans, killing those who resisted and taking the rest prisoners. In some areas the Russians were moving so fast they gave the Germans no time to entrench.

The enemy's flight also was in progress north of the Ukraine in the Bryansk area where the Moscow communique, recorded here by

Turmoil

By Edward Kennedy
Associated Press Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 10.—The great naval base of Taranto on the Italian heel was in British hands tonight after a bold oversea thrust by the Royal Navy, and the American Fifth Army was driving inland in a vast development of the Naples area after shattering five strong German counterattacks.

Taranto lies on the inside of the Italian heel on the gulf of Taranto, 80 miles from the tip of the Italian heel and 270 miles southeast of Rome. The speed with which the heavily fortified base capitulated indicated scant, if any, opposition. Landings started last night under protective British warships.

(The invasion force at Taranto may have been that which earlier Swiss dispatches said was heading for Albania, in the Balkans.

(An NBC broadcast from Algiers said only immobilized units of the Italian fleet were in Taranto, the remainder apparently having fled into the Adriatic.)

Third Allied Landing

It was the third successful Allied landing on the mainland of Europe and roughly 150 airline miles northeast of the Calabrian area where the British Eighth Army was swiftly subduing the Italian toe. In addition to being a major naval base and port through which heavy Allied reinforcements can funnel, Taranto is a key communications center with primary highways radiating north, east and west.

It was a long leap-frog move toward the Adriatic Sea, which separates Italy from the turbulent Balkans.

The fiercest fighting was in the Naples area, although Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's British Eighth Army had won control of much of the Calabrian Peninsula—the Italian toe. He advanced up the west coast beyond Pizzo to form a junction with an amphibious force which established itself at Vibo Valentia. His troops captured Monasterace Marina in a parallel drive up the southeast coast in the direction of Taranto. About 60 miles of the Italian toe was in Allied hands.

The Naples area was under violent American and British attack by land, sea and air. A tremendous Allied armada poured troops by the thousands and mountains of material onto the firmly established beachheads. Some landings actually were made on the shores of the Bay of Naples.

Island Off Coast Seized

Offshore, 25 miles west of the second largest Italian port, the Allies seized Ventotene Island, 70 miles south of beleaguered Rome. The Italian garrison promptly surrendered to the sea forces commanded by Vice Admiral Henry K. Hewitt, USN, who commands the fleets off Naples.

The contest for the Naples area developed into a grim race between Lieut. Gen. Mark W. Clark's Fifth Army and its British units and the Germans, reported moving strong reinforcements down the peninsula

Drought Blamed

Dairymen Ask Price Increase Of 1.6 Cents a Quart for Milk

A price increase of 1.6 cents a quart in the price of milk was asked yesterday by the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers Association as urgently needed to stem the steady decrease of production in the Washington milkshed area.

At a hearing in the Department of Agriculture auditorium dairy farmers from these two States termed the recent drought a last straw in their battle against increased production costs and labor scarcity.

Subsidized hay promised by the Government will be welcome, when it arrives, they said, but will not remedy the "impossible" situation in which they find themselves.

Transportation difficulties prevent the importation of milk from other areas, even if it could be located at Washington prices, it was declared, and only by holding and increasing production in this area can milk rationing be avoided for Washingtonians and their neighbors.

Already one of the Nation's "tight spots" in the milk supply picture, Washington is expected to be one of the first cities in which control of milk sales is put into effect by October. If the sales control plan does not work, or if the supply makes it imperative, the War Food Administration has declared point rationing of milk will be instituted.

"Since January, 1941, the total cost of production locally has gone up 61 per cent, while the fluid milk and cream prices has risen only 36 per cent," B. B. Derrick, manager of the association, told WFA officials conducting the hearing.

"Washington and its suburbs will require more milk next year than they do this year," Derrick said. "Yet the supply brought forth by the present price is decreasing steadily. In August, 1943, production per farm in the Washington milkshed was 11 per cent under Possible use of Italian prisoners in the Canadian wood pulp industry to increase the supply of pulp for newsprint is under consideration by United States and Canadian officials, it was learned yesterday.

It was understood that WPB authorities have made a request to the War Department for the transfer of prisoners to Canada.

Italians Abandon Posts in France

Bern, Switzerland, Sept. 9 (Delayed) (AP).—Italian troops are continuing to abandon their posts in southern France and at least 2000 already have crossed the Swiss frontier and surrendered with their arms and baggage vehicles, the Journal de Geneve reported today.

The newspaper quoted some of the Italians as saying they had to fight their way out of France through German road barriers. Others said they had turned their arms over to French guerillas in the mountains.

"Magic Name"

Roosevelt Should Preside At Peace Table, Wallace Says

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 10.—Vice President Henry A. Wallace told a press conference today that he personally wanted to suggest President Roosevelt as permanent chairman at the peace table.

Wallace said the President should preside at the peace table because of his contacts, his excellent knowledge of geography and "because the Roosevelt name is the magic name all over the world."

"It is unthinkable, to my notion, that Roosevelt should not be at the peace table," Wallace continued.

Peace decisions should be made, the Vice President emphasized, to establish a "workable world without worry—the four W's," which he termed a rephrasing of the four freedoms.

Another reason why the President should hold a prominent place in the peace negotiations, he added, was that "we as a Nation have less territorial ambition than any other nation."

Wallace came to Chicago to speak tomorrow night at a meeting in Chicago Stadium sponsored by the Chicago United Nations Committee to Win the Peace.

Referring to the Italian war situation, Wallace said it "indicates to all of us peace is closer than most of us thought some months ago.

The general feeling among the farmers seemed to be one of weariness, Wallace said.

"The farmers have been working hard, they are beginning to feel weary, and they are beginning to think they are bearing too much of the burden and are feeling abused," Wallace observed.

He said the farmers should

Planes Batter Foe In Naples Retreat

War Sidelights

Leaflets Ask Bulgarians To Surrender

London, Sept. 10 (AP).—The Swiss radio said today that Allied planes had dropped leaflets over Bulgaria, demanding that the Balkan kingdom surrender.

Similar demands were broadcast to Italy before the Allies began their large-scale operations against that country.

Italians Light Cities

New York, Sept. 10 (INS).—The British radio reported today that Italian coastal cities and towns have been "lighted up like Christmas trees" to guide Allied invasion forces. The communities, blacked-out for more than three years, have been lighted for the first time to serve as landmarks for the Allies, said the broadcast recorded by NBC.

Hitler Minimizes Fall of Italy

Premier Marshal Pietro Badoglio's government in deserting its Axis partner to make peace with the United Nations would be avenged by "hard measures."

"The Italian leaders can justify this as necessity," Hitler said of Italy's surrender, "but I will find no excuse for the fact that Italy's ally was not notified beforehand."

As to the strength of his own position as head of the German nation, Hitler declared that those who believe he can be overthrown are deeply in error.

"They do not understand," he said, "my personal position, nor the attitude of my political comrades in arms, my field marshals, admirals and generals. The German command is united as never before."

The "strength and unity" of National Socialism, Hitler declared, would never let Germany crack up.

The collapse of Italy, he said, "could be foreseen for a long time." This he attributed, not to lack of German aid—which he said had been generous—but to "lack of will."

With an eye on the Balkans, where guerillas are waiting to join Allied invaders, Hitler declared, "I am not forgetting the treachery of Yugoslavia either."

Yugoslavians in the spring of 1941 repudiated their government's signature of the tripartite pact, turned against the Germans and resisted invasion.

Terrific Strafing Reported; Lines of Communications Hit

By Graham Hovey
International News Service Staff Writer

Allied Headquarters in North Africa, Sept. 10.—German lines of retreat radiating from the Naples area were in a badly battered state today as a result of a terrific round-the-clock bombing and strafing administered by Allied warplanes.

American and British bombers, operating on a nonstop basis, rained home crippling blows on the enemy's rear lines of communication. Squadrons of the Allied tactical air force provided a strong cover for Anglo-American land reinforcements still streaming ashore, without encountering serious enemy opposition.

Bridges Smashed

One formation of Flying Fortresses, flying without escort, scored direct hits on three main bridges at Cancello, 15 miles north of Naples, blocking the chief Naples-Rome traffic arteries. Crew members of the same formation also reported having caused an explosion at a plane factory.

Another formation of Fortresses destroyed a railway bridge near Capua, 18 miles north of Naples and scored hits on two adjoining bridges.

British and Canadian Wellington bombers carried out a heavy attack on the German-held traffic network at Grosseto, 95 miles northwest of Rome, where they dropped two-ton blockbusters in a concentrated 45-minute raid.

American Liberators from Middle East bases battered a satellite landing ground of the huge Foggia airdrome 80 miles northeast of Naples, shooting down all nine of a force of would-be interceptors.

An adjacent landing ground at Tortorela was also attacked by the Liberators.

Twenty enemy planes were shot down Wednesday night and Thursday, 11 by the North African planes and the others by Liberators, without a loss.

Axis Plane Losses 38

Meanwhile, it was belatedly revealed that Fortress gunners in their big raid on the Foggia airdrome Tuesday shot down 38 Axis planes, rather than 11, as first announced.

Other objectives pummeled by Allied raiders yesterday were the railroad yards at Potenza, halfway between Naples and the captured naval base of Taranto, and the Sanzano landing ground on the Gulf of Taranto, where a railway was also cut.

Nazis Bomb and Capture Rome

mander of "southern Italy," also have "assumed protection of Vatican City," said the Berlin broadcast.

Berlin acknowledged that some Italian troops "went over to the American troops which landed in the Gulf of Salerno, ond participated in the fighting against German positions" based in the Naples area 115 miles below Rome.

The Germans said the Italian commander in Rome capitulated during the afternoon, and before going off the air the Italian news agency Stefani said the Germans had occupied strategic areas in and around Rome.

Marshal Badoglio, who had sought unsuccessfully to get the Germans to move their troops northward to the Po River, apparently fled Rome to escape capture. A Rome report said he was out of the city on a "military inspection."

Badoglio had incurred Germany's concentrated wrath when he announced Italy's unconditional surrender to the Allies Wednesday.

He left Marshal Pietro Caviglia in charge when he left the capital, and apparently it was Caviglia whom the Germans said was forced to capitulate this afternoon after the dawn attack.

The Germans declared that all the Italian army had surrendered, then belied their own assertions with broadcasts in which it was said some Italian units had joined the Allies, while "isolated fighting" between Italians and Germans continued in various sectors of the country.

The whereabouts of King Vittorio Emanuele III and other members of the royal family was not learned immediately.

Reports from Allied headquarters in North Africa said the Germans and their newly fostered Fascist regime apparently would go through the motions of "deposing" the King, whom Berlin repeatedly has branded a "traitor" since Italy's surrender.

Allied headquarters reported clashes between Italians and Germans in many parts of Italy, especially in the north, where the Germans have taken over virtually the entire area.

Many Italians in the Calabrian areas occupied by the Allies in southern Italy now regard themselves as on the United Nations' side in the fight against Germany, said the dispatches from Allied headquarters.

Berlin identified Field Marshal Erwin Rommel, former African Corps chieftain who was chased out of Africa, as commander of all German forces in Northern Italy. It said Genoa, Trieste, La Spezia, sections of the French Riviera, and Alpine passes on the German border formerly manned by Italians now were in German hands.

Airfields and ports on the Adriatic side also were in German hands, Berlin said, while in the Balkans the Italians had laid down their arms and in some cases put themselves under German orders. Field Marshal Maximilian von Weichs was said to be in charge of the Balkan areas.

Reports reaching Switzerland and Allied headquarters in North Africa, however, said Italians still were resisting in northern Italy and other sectors. One dispatch from Switzerland said the Italians still hold the industrial cities of Milan and Turin.

Stefani broadcasts over the Rome radio ceased at 7:55 p. m. (1:55 EWT) after the Germans had announced Rome's fall. The Vatican radio continued its usual broadcasts, mainly religious talks, without reference to the situation either in Rome or in Vatican City.

(United States Government monitors overseas reported that radio Palmero, Allied station in Sicily, had appropriated the usual wave length on which the Rome radio broadcasts to Italian audiences and already was giving news broadcasts to the Italian people.)

Before going off the air Stafani said an agreement had been reached with the Germans regarding Rome, Reuters reported.

This stipulated that German troops would occupy the German embassy, Italian broadcasting station, telephone exchange and other strategic points, keeping the majority of its troops outside the city limits.

Gen. Calvi Di Bergola was said to have been named commander of the Rome garrison, with an infantry division to maintain order.

A Berlin report received in Bern, Switzerland, tonight said all Rome was in German hands and that "quiet and order reigns in the city."

Finns See Italy Democracy-Bound

New York, Sept. 10 (AP).—The Finnish Lahti radio said in a broadcast to the United States today although Germany and Japan may regard Italy as a "traitor" her present course will lead her "back to democracy."

Allies Capture Taranto Base, Drive Inland Near Naples

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

OCCUPY TARANTO—Reports from the Italian-Swiss frontier yesterday reported a powerful Allied convoy (broken arrow with ship) steaming up the Ionian Sea toward Albania. Earlier reports said the Germans had occupied Albania and the whole Adriatci coast. The reported convoy, however, may have been the one which was later said to have occupied Taranto (C). Germans claimed to have captured Rome (A) as Americans strengthened their hold on Naples (B).

Since Naples controls communications in southern Italy, its capture would virtually seal off all the south.

The focal point of battle appeared to be just outside Salerno, 20 miles south of Naples on the Gulf of Salerno. There the American-British force was reported in violent combat with the German Sixteenth Armored Division.

By crushing five German counterattacks mounted in vain efforts to throw the Allies off balance, Clark had weathered the first test in the battle for Naples, which is expected within a few days to flare into the greatest fight yet waged on a Mediterranean battlefield.

The Germans struck before Clark's huge army had been unloaded completely, trying to shatter the beachheads before heavy artillery and other massive material could be established ashore.

Danger Still Present

The danger to the Allied expedition remained great, however, with Nazi motor transport moving along roads toward the battle despite unceasing Allied air attacks.

Braving the American and British air supremacy, about 40 German planes bombed the Naples beaches in a desperate effort to slow down landing operations until Nazi reinforcements could be thrown into the battle.

The whole question was whether Clark could concentrate additional troops and guns inside the beachheads faster than the German could muster their reserves on the outside. The ability of Allied air power and Italian troops to interfere with Nazi communications also were prime determinants.

Little doubt was held here that the Italians were fully in sympathy with the Allied campaign to drive out the Germans from their torn land and some German reports said the Italians in the Naples area joined up with Americans against the Germans.

United Nation radios told the Italians the blunt truth: Unless they assisted the Allied armies actively by cutting communications, the battle for Italy likely would be long and bloody despite the drive of Clark's large forces and the increasing speed of Montgomery's men.

Many Italians in the newly occupied regions of Calabria said they regarded themselves on the Allied side, asserting that the Italians preferred to fight against the Germans rather than beside them against the Allies.

Massing Along Po

Despite furious fighting in the Naples area, the Germans were massing their main forces in North Italy in preparation for defense of the Po River line barring access to the Alps.

The United Nations radio at Algiers disclosed that the Germans had taken Genoa and said the next seven days would be decisive.

"It is your task, the task of every railway worker, telegraph and telephone worker and every Italian of every class," the broadcase said, "to sever lines of communication between the German armies of northern Italy and the German armies in Naples and Calabria.

"The German invader is stunned—but only for the moment. If you give him time, he will recover and strike back with all his barbaric cruelty.

"Already he is in control of Genoa, but there still is time."

The broadcast added that the Germans were "massing their main forces in northern Italy."

German forces in Italy now find themselves with a dilemma of the first order. While those in Calabria are retiring at top speed, with the Canadian and British troops of the Eighth Army at their heels, enemy units in central Italy now find their attention divided between the strong forces of the American Fifth Army at Naples and the British forces at Taranto.

Their high command, faced with these problems, must wonder where the Allies will strike next.

Reports indicated the Germans were rushing more and more reserves into the Naples fight despite substantial losses in men and equipment from strafing and bombing by American warplanes.

British Subs Sank 13 Ships in Drive on Italy

London, Sept. 10 (AP).—British submarines sank 13 enemy vessels, including a number of supply ships, during the concluding stages of the Mediterranean operations against Italy, the Admiralty announced today.

A number of other vessels were damaged, among them an Italian destroyer, in the course of the operations, carried out mainly in the southern Adriatic, the announcement said.

Nazis' Retreat Is Near-Rout

the Soviet monitor, said the Germans were retiring so rapidly they did not even take time to lay minefields.

Stacks of Mines Captured

North of Bryansk mines were captured in stacks on the roadside, the bulletin said.

The Desna River breakthrough overran three towns on the west bank, and the Soviet forces were reported fighting for the town of Novgorod Seversky, 100 miles from Gomel and a little more than 100 miles from the Middle Dnieper River to which the Germans appeared to be retreating.

Late last night the German high command acknowledged a "limited breach" in the Nazi lines south of Konotop—apparently in the area of Bakhmach captured Thursday. "Very grim fighting is in progress," the Germans said. This drive in the north Ukraine was aimed at Kiev, 110 miles to the west.

The Soviet communique told of fresh reserves coming into Nazi lines in the north Ukraine near Priluki to counterattack time after time. They were not only checked but overwhelmed by the final Soviet thrust, it said.

A special order of the day from Marshal Joseph Stalin revealed the Mariupol victory.

Here Soviet tanks and Cossack cavalry swept into Chaplino, while Russian naval forces and air-borne troops, in a spectacular surprise assault, landed on the Sea of Azov shores to capture Mariupol.

Stalin's announcement also told of the capture of Barvenkova, midway between Stalino and Kharkov and of the taking of Volnovakha, a "most important railway junction on the Stalino-Mariupol Railway about 33 miles north of Mariupol.

The capture of Chaplino posed the greatest peril to the retreating Nazis for it put the Soviet columns 60 miles from Zaporozhe, terminal railway station for the only rail retreat line of the Nazi Crimea garrison.

This meant that the entire German southern-front forces, badly mauled west of Taganrog and falling back to the Dnieper River, may be cut off before they reach the crossings of that great stream at Zaporozhe and Dnieperopetrovsk, trapping them for annilation.

Moscow's victory guns, which have become almost commonplace in recent weeks of success after success, were ordered to thunder again with a 124-gun salute as Stalin heaped fresh praise upon Gen. Rodiony Malinovsky, commander of the southwest army groups, and his suborinate, Col. Gen. Feodor I. Tolbukhin, whose masterly use of tanks and Don Cossack horsemen had brought the Soviet advance 80 miles in two days.

German Fleet Attacks Tiny Spitsbergen

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 10.—The truant German fleet, which the British and American navies long have been trying to bring to blows, stormed into action in force against the tiny, valiant garrison of Spitsbergen Wednesday, the Norwegian high command reported tonight in a communique.

The official report did not make clear whether any Germans remained after the raid on the island, 600 miles east of Greenland and 400 miles north of Norway. Neither did it say whether any of the small Norwegian force stationed there escaped.

Smash Weather Station

Both the Norwegian report and a broadcast by the German News Agency DNB said the defenders put up stout resistance. The DNB report said the attack was made to destroy the meteorological station which had been aiding Russian convoys and seemed to indicate no Germans were left behind as a garrison. A German broadcast last night said Nazi naval units aided by marines had caused heavy casualties among the island's holding forces and taken prisoners.

An Allied force raided the island two years ago after the Germans had set a meteorological station there soon after the war started.

Official Norwegian sources here expressed the belief that German capital ships included Germany's prize battleship, the 35,000-ton Tirpitz, the battle cruiser Scharnhorst and the pocket battleships Luetzow and Admiral Scheer.

Large Force

A signal from the small Norwegian detachment of about 100 men, received at noon Wednesday, said a German squadron of large warships accompanied by seven destroyers steamed into Isfjorden on the west coast. It was the last that has been heard from the Polar Island, Norwegian sources here said.

The report that German capital ships took part in the raid indicated that the long inactive German fleet had slipped out of its refuge for a bit of safe action, but it was no indication that the mighty Tirpitz and her lesser supporters were heading toward the Atlantic to tackle British and American dreadnaughts or to smash into Allied shipping, which U-boats have been unable to check.

MacArthur Reports Plight, Says Allies Close on All Sides

By the Associated Press

Allied Headquarters in Southwest Pacific (Saturday), Sept. 11.—The Japanese garrison's situation at Lae, New Guinea, now is desperate, Gen. Douglas MacArthur's headquarters announced today.

Above the air base, Australians have crossed the Busu River near the Malahang airdrome and their patrols have encountered enemy resistance. This is the force which landed from the sea September 4 and now has wheeled up 25-pounders to pour shells into Lae.

Eighteen miles below Lae, other Allied troops enveloping the air base of Salamaua tightened their pressure. More than 100 miles above Lae at Madang, Mitchell medium bombers destroyed or damaged 21 of the supply barges on which the Japanese rely so heavily.

Raids Carried Out

On the southern coast of Dutch New Guinea, not far from its boundary with the Papuan Peninsula, 16 Japanese bombers attacked Allied-held Merauke. Three of the raiders were listed as possibly destroyed.

"Our forces from both sides are rapidly closing in on the main citadel of defenses" at Lae, today's communique said. "The enemy's position now is desperate."

In the Lae-Salamaua area a Japanese army estimated as high as 20,000 is encircled.

Paratroopers Advance

The Markham Valley Force has moved ahead from positions seized 20 miles from Lae by paratroopers September 5. Since then, big air transports have moved in reinforcements from Port Moresby in a steady stream.

For the first time since the start of the battle for New Guinea, the Japanese defenders of Lae and Salamaua are facing an Allied force equal in strength to theirs.

Italy Holds Duce Subject to Demand

London (Saturday), Sept. 11 (AP).—The London Daily Express said today that Benito Mussolini would be handed over to the Allies for trial as a war criminal, unless something happens to him in the meantime. "It is now certain he is still in Italy," the newspaper said, "and that the Italian government will have to surrender him to us on demand. No formal court procedure to get him extradited will be necessary."

Nazis 'Protect' Pope, Emulate Napoleon

By the Associated Press

The Germans' announcement that they have become "protectors" of the Vatican raises the question whether Hitler intends to make Pope Pius XII a virtual prisoner, or whether he will be deterred by the moral reaction such a step would undoubtedly arouse in neutral as well as warring countries.

If he chooses the first course, it will mark another striking parallel between the Nazi Fuehrer's career and that of Napoleon.

Pope Pius VI died a prisoner of the Little Corsican.

And as it is Hitler's creed which has brought so much woe to the world, so it was Napoleon's creed which brought him into conflict with the Holy See.

French Took Papal States

In 1791 the French National Assembly announced the union of Avignon and Venaissin, papal states, with France. In the treaty of Tolentino, 1797, Pius VI was forced to recognize their union with France and also to relinquish Ferrara, Bologna and Romagna, other papal territories, to the Cisalpine Republic.

In 1798, Napoleon sent General Berthier to Rome to organize the remainder of the church states into the Roman Republic. The Pope, because he would not renounce his claims, was taken away as a captive and confined in Valence, where death brought him release.

In the long history of the Roman Catholic Church its head has often found his person threatened.

Pius IX Besieged in 1848

During the Italian revolutionist movement of 1848 Pope Pius IX was besieged in the Quirinal but escaped in disguise to Gaeta and the protection of Neapolitan King Ferdinand II. Louis Napoleon sent troops against the revolutionists and a French garrison reestablished and maintained the papal sovereignty in Rome.

In 1870, however, Garibaldi brought Rome by force of arms under the Kingdom of Italy, and the papal states were seized. Pius IX shut himself up in the Vatican, a self-proclaimed prisoner. The Popes remained in that status until 1929, when the Vatican treaty with Mussolini was signed. This recognized the Pope as a temporal as well as spiritual ruler.

The announcement by the Navy yesterday of 24 casualties, with one dead and 23 missing, brought the total for the Navy, Coast Guard and Marine Corps to 29,300 since December 7, 1941.

The total includes 10,117 dead, 5166 wounded, 9856 missing and 4161 prisoners of war.

Landis Gets Economic Job In Middle East

By Felix Cotten

International News Service Staff Writer

Rapidly expanding Allied operations in the Mediterranean yesterday led President Roosevelt to appoint James M. Landis, chief of Civilian Defense, as American Director of Economic Operations in the Middle East.

Landis, who took over the OCD post from Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia two months after the Pearl Harbor disaster, will have the rank of minister.

He will leave in a few days for Cairo, Egypt, which he will make his headquarters. He succeeds Fred Winant, who has returned to Washington to assume direction of Middle East supply operations on this side of the Atlantic.

No informaiton was given as to the choice of a successor for the post of civilian defense director.

Landis will have overall charge of economic problems in an area extending from Tunisia eastward. His job has assumed increased importance as a result of expanding Allied military operations in the Mediterranean.

The White House, in announcing his appointment, said he would work with American legations in the Middle East as special assistant to the American Minister at Cairo.

In undertaking to tie together economic operations in the Middle East, he will be closely associated with the prosecution of the war in the Mediterranean.

Problems relating to civilian supplies, and the imports of a region that has always imported many things, will receive his attention, as well as lend-lease shipments, and the activities of the Office of Economic Warfare.

Only 2 Courts Hold Authority In OPA Suits

By the Associated Press

Peoria, Ill., Sept. 10.—Only the Emergency Court of Appeals, Washington, and the United States Supreme Court have jurisdiction and authority to enjoin the Office of Price Administration from enforcing price ceilings, a three-judge Federal Court ruled yesterday.

In supplementary remarks Judge Charles S. Briggle declared: "To my mind the trend is bad."

The court's unanimous decision was on a suit by the Roszell Dairy Co., Peoria, and 26 associated milk haulers to restrain OPA from enforcing ruling that the company's plan of "better service awards" violated price ceilings.

For New Services

The company attorney, John E. Cassidy of Peoria, contended the awards were payments for new services and not related to charges for hauling milk.

After the decision by Judge Briggle, J. Le Roy Adair and J. Earl Major, Judge Briggle turned to Cassidy and said:

"This is a culmination of a long series of acts depriving the courts of jurisdiction, vesting decisions instead in various boards throughout the country. The (OPA) act provides that no court, Federal or State, shall have power to consider the validity of any regulation of the OPA or any price schedule and this court has no power to restrain the OPA.

"The act also covers declaratory judgments. The District Court is subject to Congress. Congress can withdraw or give the court jurisdiction. In this case it has withdrawn our jurisdiction.

"To my mind the trend is bad. It is not in conformity with the traditions of America. The only remedy is to defend yourself if and when you are prosecuted. You may test the constitutionality of the (OPA) act if and when you are sued. The question is highly debatable as to whether you are violating the price ceiling. It may be a violation. It may be just good salesmanship. If you are prosecuted you certainly have the right to defend yourselves."

Huge Allied Invasion Armada Reported Headed for Albania

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 10.—The Germans hurriedly replaced their fallen Italian allies all along the Adriatic coast today and Swiss reports said that a huge Allied invasion armada was moving through the Ionian Sea toward Albania.

There was nothing to confirm or deny the Swiss report that the armada was headed towards the tiny former land of King Zog, and any force ploughing through the Ionian Sea might just as well be going to Greece, Yugoslavia—or, with the Italian navy knocked out and the German air force hard pressed from the west, could be moving through the Straits of Otranto for landings on the east coast of Italy.

Such a move would be particularly inviting now that the Allies have seized the big base of Taranto, inside the Italian heel.

[The Taranto force might have been the one that the Swiss reported moving to Albania.—Editor's note.]

There seems to be no doubt that the Germans are trying desperately to take up the sudden slack in their Balkan defenses, which developed with Italy's surrender, but there is considerable doubt whether they would be able to do this effectively and quickly.

The German news agency DNB claimed that the Nazis had seized the Albanian ports of Valona and Burazzo and the town of Elbason and the Yugoslav port of Ragusa and that the Italians had been disarmed up and down the entire Adriatic coast.

The Swiss report, quite likely, was a nervous shot in the dark, inspired by the feverish German efforts to decide which way the pieces are falling, but then, there is no question that the whole Ionian and Adriatic shores were opened by the swift removal of the Italian fleet.

Chief fact supporting the speculations is the continuing lack of reports from the American Seventh Army, which participated in the invasion of Sicily, but may, however, show up farther north on the western side of the peninsula. The chief argument against it is the immense logistical task of keeping three or more offensives going at one time over such widspread communication lines.

Not Attractive to Invader

Albania, itself, is not particularly attractive as a target for an invader since of its four ports, Durazzo, Valona, San Giovanni and Porto Edda, only the first is well equipped. Communication generally are bad in the country and in many places, where the mountains don't reach down to the shoreline, there are marshy malarial lowlands.

Yugoslavia, also, is rocky and not very inviting as an invasion point.

The Swiss reports from Chiasso, on the Italian-Swiss border, said that the armada was escorted by a squadron of warships, under cover of "important" air forces. Reuters also reported a large Allied convoy under way in the Ionian. The Swiss report said an Allied landing was imminent.

"If the farmer lived under those conditions he might find he was much happier at home on the farm where he always has plenty of food," Wallace said.

Commenting on the "Mackinac charter" of the Republican Party, Wallace said it was "skillfully contrived in the Republican tradition of 1920." He said the Republicans were "for a league of nations then, too, but the words didn't mean much."

Italian Fleet Still a Mystery

ian heel, did not make any mention of naval units. Recently there have been reports that the Taranto fleet had fled to Pola at the head of the Adriatic.

The German claim to sinking an Italian battleship and cruiser, like the others broadcast by the Berlin radio, said they were part of a formation which escaped from La Spezia and "on Anglo-American orders was attacking German shipping between Sardinia and Corsica."

The Germans added that the attack of the Nazi bombers "was so effective that another battleship, cruiser and destroyer were severely damaged by bomb hits."

"The battle with this naval formation is still in progress," the broadcast concluded.

High Hopes in London

London morning newspapers had said that three 35,000-ton Italian battleships were en route from La Spezia to Allied ports with a flotilla of cruisers and destroyers.

All of these events stirred high hopes in London that carefully worked out plans were delivering the bulk of the fleet and a million tons of merchant shipping into Allied hands.

It was learned that in formulating the armistice, orders were established for all Italian war ship captains and scores of merchant ship masters, telling them how to escape and what ports to go to.

It seemed certain that the peace news was held up five days partly to enable the ships to slip away.

The German claims tended to confirm hopes for the success of this program.

While not disposed to accept at their face value the Berlin claims, one highly placed naval authority here said he was inclined to believe the attack on the Spezia formation occurred.

Not in Allied Naval Plans

The immediate benefits from the removal of the Italian fleet to Allied control would be only negative in getting the ships away from the Germans. Later, it might be fitted into the Allied naval pictur., but this would take some time because of a lack of personnel trained in the Italian vessels.

On the basis of an authoritative statement that Italy was not regarded as an ally but as a conquered nation, it is presumed that there was no desire to have the Italians fight in their own ships along with the American and British men-of-war.

It is conceivable, however, that some units might be used to convoy Italian merchantmen to help supply their own people.

Air Collision Fatal to Five Near Norfolk

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 10.—Five crew members of a medium Army bomber were killed today when two bombing planes collided in the air near the Norfolk, Va., air base, the Eastern Defense Command announced.

The second bomber was able to reach Langley Field, Va., safely, the EDC said.

Names of the five victims of the crash were withheld pending notification of relatives. A board of inquiry was named to investigate the cause of the collision.

OPA Considers Cut in Price Of Vitamins

By the Associated Press

The Office of Price Administration is considering an order to cut retail prices of packaged vitamins about one-fifth, over the objections of business that this would be an improper attempt at controlling profits.

Joseph Coppack, head of OPA's chemicals and drug branch, is out of town and no one in his office is willing to be quoted by name. However, one said a preliminary study on the extent of the proposed cut shows that the cost of raw materials going into vitamin manufacture has gone down an average of approximately 75 per cent since 1939, while average retail prices have dropped but 5 per cent.

"It is contemplated there will be an over-all price reduction order, based upon reduced production costs," the official said. "We can't say whether it will average 20 per cent or some other figure until labor costs and other factors are studied thoroughly."

Recently the OPA called in industry representatives and recommended that they voluntarily reduce prices by 20 per cent.

Disclosure that a mandatory cut order is contemplated came after Fred J. Griffiths, secretary of the National Association of Chain Drug Stores, said in New York that the move would amount to an attempt at "profit control" by the OPA. He contends OPA has legal authority only to restrict price increases.

"There has been no increase in the price of vitamins since 1938," Griffith said. "What they proposed was not price control but . . . limit on profits based upon the old theory, which has been rampant in OPA since its early days, that increased volume should not produce increased profits."

Claim Power in Act

He said if the move succeeded it might result in similiar price cuts in other commodities.

The OPA spokesman said a slashing of vitamin prices would mark the first instance in which an important consumer-item had been rolled back below the prewar price levels. Officials of the chemicals and drugs branch hold the view there is nothing in the emergency Price Control Act to prevent OPA from ordering such rollbacks "where increased volume and reduced costs make a reduction equitable from the standpoint of the industry and the consumer."

OPA said the vitamin industry has grown tremendously in recent years and that retail sales this year would amount to about 173 million dollars.

Friday the 13th, despite popular conceptions, was no jinx day for Brig. Gen. Glen C. Jamison, of Washington, 13th Army Air Force Bomber Commander—on August 13, a Friday, he received both the Legion of Merit and the Distinguished Flying Cross for his South Pacific service.

As a matter of fact, General Jamison undoubtedly has Lady Luck for a flying companion, for last February, after being missing in action for six days, he was found safe. He has been on duty in the South Pacific region since July, 1942, and returned here three weeks ago.

The presentations to General Jamison, who has flown over 200 hours in hostile territory, were made by Lieut. Gen. Millard F. Harmon, commander of USAF in the South Pacific.

The Legion of Merit was granted for exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding services from August to June, Army headquarters in that area reported. It was stated that "as chief of staff, Thirteenth Air Force, he was largely instrumental in developing and bringing the newly formed command to its present state of organization and efficiency, proving one of the most effective striking forces against the Japanese air power in the South Pacific."

General Jamison's "numerous flying missions to and from advanced bases in the South Pacific area" from July 28 to August 7 won for him the Distinguished Flying Cross.

A native of Richmond, Kans., General Jamison was graduated from West Point in 1923 and was twice stationed here during his military career. His wife, Mrs. Ada M. Jamison, resides at 2930 33d pl. nw.

U-Boat War at Lowest Ebb

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Staff Writer

The American, British and Canadian governments declared in a joint statement yesterday that more enemy submarines have been sunk than merchant ships during August which "has been another successful month in U-boat warfare."

The monthly report, the third issued jointly so far, was on activity in the Atlantic where U-boats once were taking a heavy toll of American shipping destined to war-beleaguered allies.

"It is significant," the statement stressed, "that the enemy made virtually no attempt to attack North Atlantic shipping, and opportunities for attacking the U-boats have been relatively few.

Hunted Relentlessly

"Nevertheless, U-boats have been hunted relentlessly on all stations wherever they have appeared and a heavy toll has been taken of the enemy."

The report was issued under an agreement reached by the governments three months ago to release a single, periodic statement on submarine warfare rather than allow a number of possibly confusing or damaging statements by individual officials.

Text of the announcement:

"1. August has been another successful month in U-boat warfare. Owing perhaps to rearmament and other causes, there appear to have been fewer U-boats at sea in recent months, and shipping losses have continued to decrease.

"2. It is significant that the enemy made virtually no attempt to attack North Atlantic shipping and opportunities for attacking the U-boats have been relatively few. Nevertheless U-boats have been hunted relentlessly on all stations wherever they have appeared and a heavy toll has been taken of the enemy. In fact more U-boats have been sunk than merchant ships.

"3. Surface and air forces have both contributed to this month's work by the efficiency of their escorts, patrols, and offensive operations. Shore-based aircraft have often had to face powerful enemy air poposition and carrier-borne aircraft have played a most important part.

"4. We are ready to attack the enemy with utmost vigor should he provide the opportunity by resuming a general attack on our shipping with the very large number of U-boats at his disposal."

Expected to Return

Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox disclosed Wednesday that there is reason to believe that the Germans have been calling in their U-boats to put antiaircraft guns on them.

Knox has said, "It's sure as sunrise that they will be back in there again. There is no reason to believe that we have disposed of the submarine menace."

The report contained no comparative figures for reasons of security. But a general picture of the improved situation can be drawn from the joint statement August 14 by President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill that 90 German submarines had been sunk in the three months preceding August.

11th Train Victim Of D. C. Identified As Corpl. Argent

The name of the eleventh Washington victim of the Congressional Limited wreck near Philadelphia, Monday, was made known yesterday with the identification of Corpl. Harry R. Argent, 19, formerly of 1343 Clifton st. nw.

He had been spending a 15-day furlough with a brother, Samuel E. Argent, of the West Clifton Apartments and was en route to Los Angeles via New York, where his mother now lives, to report for duty.

He was employed by the Veterans Administration here and in New York prior to his induction last January. He was a native of the District and a graduate of Powell Junior High School. He had also attended Central High School.

Surviving are his mother, Mrs. Frances Argent, of New York and the brother here. The funeral will be held today at 9:30 a. m. in Fort Myer Chapel, with burial in Arlington Cemetery.

Just prior to the identification of Corpl. Argent, the body of Helen L. Chaney, 19, of New York, was claimed. She was the daughter of Mrs. Helen B. Chaney of Alexandria, Va., who was also killed in the wreck.

The last of the 79 victims to be identified was Mrs. Laura E. Roth, 52, of New York. Her daughter, Mrs. Kathryn E. Lowrey of Staten Island, made the identification.

Baruch Urges End of Labor Hoarding

and eliminating labor hoarding. Government investigations and questionnaires should be restricted to avoid overburdening plant managerial staffs, already spread too thin.

5. War contracts: Present cost-plus-fixed-fee contracting makes it easy to hoard labor since the Government pays the bill regardless, even for idle hands. A system of fixed price contracting which rewards efficient producers should be substituted.

6. Postwar factors: The country is suffering from an attack of "peace jitters," arising from the optimistic war news. To counteract postwar thinking by employers and employes which will hurt war production, efficient employers should now be assured end-of-the war priorities on conversion materials and tools. Employers should announce postwar employment policies promising the first call on choice jobs to workers who stick to their war jobs.

7. Contract cancellation: Manufacturers — many of whom make goods for more than one Government procurement arm—ought to be assured a uniform contract-cancellation policy in the event of contract terminations arising out of changes in war programs or at the end of the war.

8. Aircraft production: Now the No. 1 production program, a concentrated effort must be made to solve aircraft's problems without waiting for national service legislation.

9. National service legislation: The West Coast program—establishing labor priorities and employment ceiling and deferring workers in accordance with those priorities and ceilings contains all the elements of national service legislation. If the West Coast program fails because of administration, national service legislation also must fail.

10. Need for community support: Compulsion cannot be made to make a man work for someone else who will make a profit out of the man's labor unless community support is mobilized to enforce any manpower program adopted. With the community behind the program, it may be unnecessary to adopt additional controls.

11. Manpower problems elsewhere: The West Coast program should be regarded as a laboratory program—to work out the kinks. It should set the pattern for the imposition of controls elsewhere as local manpower troubles arise.

The Baruch-Hancock report was said to have pointed out that the West Coast manpower problem developed from the placing of contracts without regard to the region's labor supply and the difficulties involved in persuading people to cross the Rockies to take West Coast jobs.

Blow Up Demand

Contractors, faced with demands for goods beyond their capacity, naturally blow up their demand for labor—resulting in hoarding of labor. Political influences then combine to bring still more contracts into the region.

It must be decided, the report was said to have recommended, that no more contracts can be placed on the West Coast. Many existing contract schedules will have to be stretched over a greater period of time, much of the work must be subcontracted, and some of it must be canceled.

It was understood that Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission, already is making arrangements to transfer some ship contracts from the West Coast to other yards.)

Faulty contract placement was aggravated by a great many "little things" which have been contributing to labor turnover and absenteeism. Inadequate provision for beauty parlors, poor plant toilet facilities, washrooms, and lockers have discouraged women from taking and sticking at war jobs. Housing has generally been inadequate; community facilities short.

Specific Recommendations

Specific techniques to increase the work force of the West Coast aircraft plants included a recommendation for the adoption of four-hour part-time shifts for women homemakers, use of school children on a similar part-time basis, and release from the armed forces of certain key people who have been pulled out of the plants by the draft.

The West Coast program finally adopted was originally proposed by the War Manpower Commission and then elaborated in the light of the Baruch-Hancock report. In its final form, it provided for the establishment of interagency committees to determine labor priorities and employment ceilings for West Coast plants, and to make recommendations for the withdrawal of war contracts and the curtailment of civilian production in the region, thus setting up a manpower budget to bring the demand for labor within the supply. Hiring in the controlled areas must be done through the United States Employment Service. As far as possible, decisions in connection with the program will be made on the West Coast—not in Washington.

Dairymen Ask Milk Raise of 1.6 Cts. a Quart that of last year."

The summer drought in most areas of the milkshed, declared, "has been more severe than any other on record" and its effects cannot be overcome by September rains.

His testimony was borne out by about a dozen farmers, truckers and county agents, who reported beginnings of "what promises to be" a widespread liquidation of dairy herds and a feeling of defeatism among dairymen "unable to break even" although they work 84 hours a week.

Output Drops 20%

Typical of their statements was that by W. B. Nourse of Warrenton, Va., who said production in his vicinity was down 20 per cent under that of last year and heading toward a 30 per cent decrease by November.

Even with money "supposedly plentiful," they said, banks in the Washington milkshed do not consider dairying a sound business. Nourse told of a bank that had sold the dairy herd it had as an investment, while a Maryland farmer said a Baltimore bank had turned down a request for credit from a dairy group which earlier this year had considered putting some idle farms into operation "to help increase the Nation's food supply."

Rep. May Suggests Draft 'Mark Time'

California, chairman of the subcommittee, in line with the suggestion that the armed forces might now be large enough, declared that he doubted the ability of the American people "to increase its armed forces beyond their present strength without a corresponding breakdown in production."

Downey said that uniformed personnel plus civilian employes of the armed services now approach 14 million, and that another six or seven million workers will be preempted by our Lend-Lease commitments. Even with that aid, he said, America is seeking to outproduce the rest of the world, and at the same time ship to the fighting fronts an Army the bulk of which is still in this country. He said these were the reasons leading him to believe in leaving the armed forces at their present level.

Downey's committee also heard Lieut. Col. Francis V. Keesling, jr., Selective Service legislative officer, renew his appeal to "stop, look and listen" before letting the Senate reach a test of the bill by Senator Wheeler (Democrat) of Montana to defer fathers at least to January 1.

Modifies Statement

At the same time, Keesling modified an earlier statement against the Wheeler bill by saying that if the high command changed its war plans so that fewer men were needed in uniform, the legislation might do no harm. But he urged that the high command be heard before Congress compels it to change war plans by withdrawing fathers from the military manpower pool.

May later explained that his plan for calling a temporary halt to inductions was not expected to go into the father deferment bill, but indicated it might be taken up along with reconsideration of the Austin-Wadsworth national service bill.

He protested that the War Manpower Commission now is using the Selective Service law as "a club" to force labor into war jobs.

"If they're going to do that, they ought to wait until we pass a national service bill," May observed. He made clear that he was referring to the Austin-Wadsworth bill.

Waste-Paper Profits to Aid Groups, Welfare

Funds received through the sale of waste paper collected in the current paper salvage campaign will go directly to the various organizations of citizens aiding in the drive and will be used for the public welfare, it was announced yesterday by James E. Colliflower, chairman of the D. C. Salvage Committee.

He also gave assurances that access to additional trucking facilities plus a new collection system will result in prompt pickup of contributions on the appointed days.

The plan will first be put into effect in the southeast area. The first collection date is Saturday, September 18. Collections will be made the third Saturday in each month thereafter. Dates in the other areas are as follows: Southwest, September 25, every fourth Saturday; Northeast, October 2, first Saturday in each month; Northwest, October 9, second Saturday monthly.

Southeast subdivisions and the organizations in charge are: Southeast, Southeast Civilian Defense Committee Washington Highlands, Patterson P-TA; Congress Heights, Congress Heights P-TA; Barry Farm, Barry Farm Civilian Defense Committee; Garfield, Garfield Civilian Defense Committee; Anacostia, Boy Scout Troop, No. 58; Randall Highlands, Randall Highlands Civilian Defense Committee; Hillcrest and Summit Park, Hillcrest Citizens Association; North Randall, North Randall Warden Service; Bradbury Heights, Davis P-TA; Marshall Heights, Marshall Heights Civic Association. Details on the organization of other areas will be announced later.

The following grades of waste paper are wanted specifically: Corrugated boxes, brown paper, newspapers and magazines. Mixed waste paper is not wanted.

Leaders to Make Stiff Economy Bid

By McNary

Early Action On Foreign Policy Seen

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Senate action within the next few weeks on a postwar foreign policy course was predicted yesterday by Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon, Senate Republican leader.

McNary commended the foreign policy plank approved by the Republican Postwar Advisory Council at Mackinac Island, Mich., as "broad and forthright," but added:

"Future events may justify a more definite statement within the framework of the declaration."

The Senate minority leader, among the vanguard of Senators returning to the Capitol for the congressional session opening next Tuesday, declined to elaborate what he meant by "more definite."

"I can't foresee the future," he told newsmen.

Not Reactionary

McNary, who was unable to attend the Mackinac conference, said he commended the GOP council's action "because it does not look toward any reactionary policy."

The Republican resolution, a compromise between diverse party views represented at Mackinac, recently was qualifiedly indorsed by Wendell Willkie as "a step in the right direction."

The resolution declared for responsible participation by the United States in a postwar cooperative organization among sovereign nations "to prevent military aggression and to attain permanent peace with organized justice in a free world."

Resolutions Pending

Several more specific resolutions are pending before the Senate, notably the Ball-Burton-Hatch-Hill commitment calling not only for international machinery for peaceful settlement of disputes but for an international military force to suppress future aggression.

In a recent Texas speech, Senator Tom Connally, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee which must act on the resolutions, called for an international agency with power "to call upon member nations for troops and navies when necessary" to suppress aggression.

By Mid-October

McNary said he preferred not to discuss the various proposals but thought the Senate itself would pass a postwar resolution by mid-October. "We ought to dispose of it," he said. "After Mackinac, I think the desire will be to speed action."

Earlier, the Mackinac action had drawn a broadside from Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Senate Democratic Campaign Committee. In a mimeographed statement, Guffey called the Republican commitment "the most entertaining straddle in the history of political declarations."

"To the Wilkieites it promises devotion to an international accord—a League of Nations with teeth practically," said Guffey, "and to the isolationists it pledges adherence to the immortal principal that nothing shall be done that infringes our title to do as we please . . ."

Knutson to Call Meeting to Link Proposal With Taxes

A strong bi-partisan movement for an Administration program of economy, as part and parcel of any new tax program, has developed in the House Ways and Means Committee.

This was indicated yesterday as Representative Harold Knutson of Minnesota, a ranking minority member, said he would call a meeting of his group next week, to discuss specific economy demands.

Previously, Representative Robert L. Doughton, (Democrat) of North Carolina, chairman of the committee, and other ranking Democrats had frequently expressed the belief that unnecessary Government spending must be cut as a companion move to tax action.

Doughton told newsmen yesterday that Treasury officials undoubtedly will be questioned on the prospect of Government savings when hearings on the new tax program open September 20.

Questioning Planned

Another Democratic member of the committee, Representative John D. Dingell of Michigan recently told reporters he favored Ways and Means questioning of officials of various war agencies in an effort to eliminate "waste."

Knutson said he was not sure the committee could question spokesmen for the spending agencies without treading on the toes of the Appropriations Committee, but the Republican minority probably would consider this along with other economy moves at their meeting.

An investigation into alleged lavish spending by war agencies already has been launched in the Senate by Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat) of Virginia.

Tax Allowance Opposed

Testifying before the committee yesterday on revision of the renegotiation of contracts law, Treasury General Counsel Randolph Paul meanwhile told the committee the Treasury will be ready to present its tax recommendations at the close of the rengotiation hearings, or in about 10 days.

Both Paul and Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones opposed allowance for corporation taxes and postwar reserves in renegotiating war contracts. To renegotiate contracts, after taxes are deducted as an item of cost, would be equivalent to the Government itself paying a wartime levy, Paul said. Jones similarly testified: "That would mean the Government was paying the taxes."

Should Be in Tax Law

Paul and Jones testified the renegotiation statute is not the proper place to provide postwar reserves for industry; that if such reserves are necessary they should be provided in the tax law.

Paul estimated corporate profits during the three war years 1941-42-43, at a total of $24,200,000,000 after payment of taxes. If allowance was made for $12,600,000,000 in corporate dividends paid, the three-year profit total would stand at $11,600,000,000, Paul estimated.

The Treasury witness figured corporate profits after taxes and dividends at $2,600,000,000 for 1941; $4,250,000,000 for 1942 and $4,750,000,000 for 1943.

Under questioning, Paul said he did not know how much of the amount was "reinvested."

Norfolk Man Wins Medal on Russian Trip

Third Mate Edward Michael Fetherston leaped for one of the two measly little 30-caliber machine guns—the sole arms of his cargo ship as a flight of Stukas roared down upon the craft.

Geysers of water from near misses hurtled down on the decks and bullets ripped and sung around the unprotected gun. But eitherston knew the importance of the cargo his vessel was carrying to the beleaguered Russians. And so for six days of almost continuous attack he aided in its defense.

The attackers were finally driven off and the supplies landed only to see the ship torpedoed and sunk on the return voyage. Again Fetherston lived up to the best traditions of the sea.

He dragged a wounded fireman from below decks, lifted him into a lifeboat and cared for him until the survivors were picked up.

And so today at 10 a. m., the 27-year-old mariner from Norfolk, Va., will stand at attention in the office of Capt. Edward MacCauley, member of the US Maritime Commission in the Commerce Building, hear a citation for heroism read and receive the Merchant Marine Distinguished Service Medal.

Polio Cases Climb To 557 in Chicago

Chicago, Sept. 10 (INS).—The number of infantile paralysis cases in Chicago since July 1, climbed tonight to the record figure of 557, exceeding by 1 the worst previous epidemic in 1917. Twenty-seven new cases and one death were reported today.

Crop Prospects Off One Pct. In August; Drought Blamed

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

Crop prospects over the country declined almost 1 per cent during August, with official estimates on the 1943 production of grain sorghums, sweet potatoes, and peanuts falling from 6 to 18 per cent under the July figures.

Drought, the primary cause behind a continued downward trend in the Nation's prospective food supply, made drastic inroads into harvests of the South Central States, according to the Department of Agriculture monthly crop report released yesterday.

In addition to lessened hopes for the three "war crops" suffering the greatest damage, prospects went off also for oats, barley, hay, sugar cane, cotton and tobacco while the corn outlook in Kansas and Nebraska fell substantially and declines were noted in the "New Jersey to Virginia area" and locally in southern portions of Illinois and Missouri. The Kansas corn prospect went off 23 per cent during the month.

Pastures Poorer

Pastures and prospects for feed crops in most Southern States were "poorer than on any previous September 1 since 1936" and news of the liquidation of livestock from farms with short feed supplies was beginning to come in, the report stated.

Rains during the first week of September doubtless remedied part of this situation, it was pointed out.

Meanwhile, the War Food Administration moved to speed shipments of beef to American soldiers overseas by ordering Federally inspected slaughterers to make increased quantities of boneless beef immediately available to military procurement officers.

Eighty per cent of the Government's beef purchases must now be in the form of frozen and boneless cuts. By having slaughterers do the boning direct much time will be saved, WFA believes, and by buying only boneless beef the agency will effect additional economies in shipping space and costs.

The over-all meat supply, as shown by slaughtering figures, remains increasingly good.

7 Per Cent Below 1942

The Department of Agriculture in its crop report emphasized the size of the total food prospects. Despite the declines, indications on September 1 were that crop production this year will be 7 per cent higher than in any other year except 1942. From the largest acreage planted in 10 years, however, production promises to be 7 per cent below the bumper yields of a year ago.

Some 1943 crops will top all previous records. These include beans, peas, soybeans, peanuts, rice, white potatoes, flaxseed and grapes. Also, the report stated, there will be large yields of hay, oats, barley and grain sorghum and about average crops of wheat, rye, cotton, tobacco and sweet potatoes. The corn crop is now forecast at 2,985,000,000 bushels, which would be the second largest corn crop in 23 years.

Nationally, it was declared, the feed supply is large—but not well distributed. If supplies are closely utilized "about the usual quantity per head of livestock can be fed." Transportation difficulties are greater than a year ago, however, and price ceilings on feed augment the problem of securing shipment outside areas where the feed is grown, the report pointed out.

Raisins, Prunes Released

The WFA yesterday authorized West Coast packers to release from 120,000 to 130,000 tons of dried raisins and prunes from their 1943 production for sale to civilians through regular trade channels. The Government owns the entire 1943 crops and may order other civilian set-asides from time to time.

Speaking in Chicago, Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard paid tribute to the Nation's victory gardeners and described the 1943 victory program as "an outstanding success." He predicted the food output from 20 million gardens would total eight million tons.

"That is a lot of food at a time when food is one of our great offensive weapons in the war and one of our principal hopes for bringing about a constructive peace," he declared.

Stick to Rate Facts, Hankin Is Warned

Hearings before the Public Utilities Commission on the question of gas rates to be charged during the rate year, beginning this past September 1, were highlighted yesterday when minority member Gregory Hankin was warned not to prolong the proceedings by taking up irrelevant matters.

Delving into so-called "non-irrelevant" aspects of the rate hearings by Hankin, caused PUC Chairman James Flanagan to issue the warning that the proceedings must continue on current problems.

The hearings, which center around the fairness of the currently allowed 6.5 per cent return on rate base holdings of the company, will probably culminate within the next two or three days, it was indicated.

The opinion at present is that the commission will request a one-half per cent reduction in the currently allowed base rate return. To combat this, W. C. Gilman, a consultant engineer and financial expert, testified that the company must have a base rate of return of approximately 6.67 per cent in order to retain a fair rate of return.

Marshal Seizes 36,000 Pounds Of Unfit Butter

More than 36,000 pounds of butter and 300 boxes of candy bars have been seized by the United State's Marshal's Office for the District of Columbia since August 30.

It was seized as unfit for human consumption under terms of the Federal pure food laws, and includes cocoanut bonbons, peanut candies and chop suey bars.

If it is not claimed for reprocessing within a reasonable time, the District Court may order it condemned, in which event it will either be destroyed or otherwise used by the Government.

More Leaders Are Selected For War Fund

Work in the Community War Fund Campaign moved ahead rapidly yesterday as more names were added to the list of division and section leaders.

Chairman and vice chairman of the four suburban divisions were announced. Leading Arlington County are R. Wade Pearson, chairman, and Harold J. Stehman, vice chairman; Fairfax County, John A. K. Donovan, chairman, and J. Craig Hunter, vice chairman; Montgomery County, Stedman Prescott, chairman, and Mrs. B. Peyton Whalen, vice chairman; Prince Georges County, Brice Clagett, chairman, and Mildred Alexander, vice chairman.

Section Leaders Named

The commercial district of the business and finance division announced the complete organization of four functional groups and 13 sections within its organization. Headed by Harvey J. Cheston, the group leaders are James Rotto, Carl Gubisch, William O. Herrman, John L. Payette, Nat B. Browne, L. Gardner Moore and Arthur J. Barnett.

The following men were named leaders of the sections: Thomas N. Leef, Martin Harmond Nat Hauser, J. C. Sharrah, Frank Gatewood, V. B. Moriarity, A. S. Nolan, H. K. Moore, Nat B. Browne, G. Bennett Larson, Arthur J. Harnett, LeRoy Risk, Mrs. Alfred Earnest, Julius Lulley and Everett Martin.

2400 Firms Listed

Leaders of the Industrial District are John W. Hardell Leon Chatelain, jr., John H. Bartless, John H. Davis and George A. Hallonee; of the Financial District, Sanley D. Willis, Albert J. Phillips and Lewis T. Breuninger; of the Service District, W. L. James, George F. Kindley, Harold S. Fitz and Ben S. Foster; of the Consumer District, John Waters, Claude A. Cook, J. Donald Sutherland and Clark G. Diamond.

All of the above-named districts are part of the Business and Finance division, which plans to solicit approximately 2400 firms for their contributions to the War Fund campaign.

2 Groups Study Nominees for Bishophood

Appointment of two special subcommittee to study qualifications of potential nominees for election as new Bishop of Washington were announced last night, following a meeting of Justice Owen Roberts' nominating committee at the Washington Cathedral.

Henry J. Blair and the Rev. Armand T. Eyler, the latter pastor of St. Margaret's Episcopal Church, were appointed chairman of committees to study the qualifications, respectively, of clergymen in and out of the Washington Diocese, whose names have been submitted to Justice Roberts' committee by Episcopalians throughout the country.

Justice Roberts' nominating committee probably will select seven names for nomination at a special Diocesan Convention, following the General Convention of the Episcopal Church next month in Cleveland. However, additional nominations may be made from the floor at the Diocesan convention. Justice Roberts' committee has received 44 suggestions as nominees.

Organist-Community Sing Leader Is a Busy Boy

By Marjorie Kelly

"Holler LOUD when you get off the elevator," said Jackie Niles as he directed me where to find Art Brown, the Capitol's organist. Finding Art between shows, it turned out, involved invading the "men's dormitory" of the Capitol. That's the floor on which Art, Sam Jack Kaufman and Lynn Allison have their dressing rooms. Lynn's presence would seem to indicate that the term "men's dormitory" is irrelevant; but not so. She's there under bitter protest by both of the gentlemen mentioned, who figured that a lady on the floor would inhibit their gin-rummy game vocabularies.

"So we just ignore her," says Art.

Lynn, incidentally, says that her vocabulary has grown considerably as a result of their particular brand of ignoring.

Art is the genial, easy-going fellow whose duties besides playing the organ for the Capitol's stage shows include getting the audience to sing along with him. He's phenomenally successful in doing that—even at early matinees you'll hear a full-throated roar when Art asks the audience to join in. This is somewhat of a trick, as anyone who has tried it will tell you. People love to sing, and sing loud and heartily, but nevertheless somebody has to get them started. Art himself attributes his success to his informality and ease.

"It's a personality job, absolutely a personality job," he says. "They feel at ease because they know I do. I'm up there and I don't give a hoot what happens, and if I feel like kidding the pants off them I will, and if they kid me back I like that too."

Art think the Washington audience is the easiest to play for and the finest he has ever encountered, and he doesn't mind saying so.

"It's because they're a small-town audience," he says. "They come from small towns all over the country, and they like to be handed a line like mine, it makes them feel at home."

He kids the customers continually. "Where you from, sailor?" he will ask a boy in the front row. "Milwaukee? Who in the house is from Milwaukee? . . . Well, girlie, you two ought to get acquainted. Come on down here and meet the sailor."

Or he'll spot somebody in the audience eating candy." "Pass that to your neighbor," he'll admonish. "He's hungry, too," and the patron obediently does it. He notices people in the audience, and when he sees the same youngsters staying through successive shows he'll throw the spot on them. "This young lady has been here five hours, and she's hungry," he said once when he spotted a faithful teen-ager in the same seat at 6 o'clock which she has occupied at 1. "Somebody in the back row go out and get her a sandwich. Go on now." And sure enough, someone did.

A job like Art Brown's demands an extensive collection of material. His dressing room contains a large file case full of the slides which are used to throw words of songs on the screen as he plays. Not many are ever used more than one week. Some of the old favorites can be kept and used again and again. But for the most part, the slides used are new ones, received from a company in New York which services about 75 theaters with slides for community singing. They keep pretty well ahead. Art has a stack of parodies on hand that he thinks will go over very well when he gets around to using them. One is a take-off on the Capital Transit Co. to the tune of "The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze."

"You swing and you sway
"But not with Sammy Kaye
"Because of a wild motorman," that one goes.

Art's day begins at 5 in the morning, when he gets up in time to have breakfast before his 6:30 WOL broadcast. That lasts until 8:30, and from there he goes to the Capitol. His first show is generally about noon. His last is around 10 p. m., after which he goes home, reads the papers, and so to bed. Four and a half to five hours of sleep is a good average for him.

In spite of this schedule, he has the reputation of never turning down a call from a charity or a Government drive of any sort. Between shows, or after his day at the Capitol ends, he will somehow manage to take care of any request he gets. It's a hectic life he leads. "I've been at the Capitol four years now," he says. For the past two years I've been going to quit and get some sleep. But I haven't yet."

Nice Going!

At the end of the first official day of the war bond drive receipts for the bond premiere Wednesday night at the Palace of "For Whom the Bell Tolls" were safely close to the promised million-dollar mark—$843,512. was the figure, Loew's relays.

Mars Messes Up the Movies

Hollywood, Sept. 10.—Mars is busy messing up the movies of late.

Geographical changes on the fighting fronts, OPA changes on the home front, the flight of Mussolini, the reported shooting of Hitler—all these and many more chameleonesque alterations of the global scene raise daily hob with the product on Hollywood's assembly line.

Screen plays are being rewritten, sequences eliminated and new scenes substituted; story conferences become quandary huddles, as producers, directors, scenarists and film editors race to keep pace with a transitory world.

Olivia de Havilland is speaking before a Senate investigating committee. Not actually, y'understand, but in her new RKO Radio picture, "Government Girl." Her boss, Sonny Tufts, is on the carpet for taking short cuts in his desperate effort to increase plane production. The "Government girl" takes the stand, admits the truth of the charges, then makes a rousing, rip-roaring speech that works on the sluggish solons like a shot of plasma:

"You hear those planes?" she demands, as the drone of engines filters down from Washington skies. "That's the sound of the big new Navy bombers over Kiska——"

Kiska Falls Inopportunely

Well, the Japanese jerks took it on the lam from Kiska the day after "Government Girl" was completed. It was a great day for the USA and no one appreciated it more than Director-Writer Dudley Nichols, veteran of World War I. Nonetheless, it must have been rather upsetting to rewrite, redirect Miss de Havilland's splendid oratorical outburst.

Pat O'Brien recently starred in the title role of "The Iron Major," life story of the late Maj. Frank Cavanaugh, noted football coach and hero of the first world conflict. Major Cavanaugh died poor, but he left a great heritage to Uncle Sam—six sons now in the Army, a daughter in the Marines. Producer Robert Fellows had made all arrangements to use these gallant youngsters in an important scene of the picture. Came time to do so, and he discovered to his dismay that four of the boys had been ordered overseas; the two other sons and the daughter sent to camps far from Hollywood. Terrific was the last-minute rush to find six actors and an actress who would be suitable to the parts.

The Frank Ross production, "A Lady Takes a Chance," stars Jean Arthur and John Wayne in a sophisticated American comedy laid in 1937. Surely, you'd think, the war couldn't cause a Hollywood headache here. You have another think. There was a foreword to the picture calling attention to the good old days when people—— "drank three cups of coffee at once." It was made an integral part of the film just before the OPA took java off the rationed list.

Katina Paxinou, brilliant Greek character actress who played Pilar in "For Whom the Bell Tolls," has a most important role in Ginger Rogers' current starring vehicle, "Tender Comrade." The script listed her as a German-born housekeeper in an American home, the dialogue having a direct bearing on that status. Miss Paxinou flatly refused to play a German-born housekeeper.

Katina Nixes Playing German

"No matter how loyal to the United States this housekeeper is supposed to be," said the actress, "I'll play no woman of German birth after what the Nazis have done to my country."

So the part had to be rewritten. Miss Paxinou now plays a Greek housekeeper.

Elsa Lanchester's next picture will identify her as an English scrubwoman who goes to Berlin to dispose once and for all of Der Fuehrer. Tentatively titled "Dangerous Journey," it was scheduled to start filming two months hence. Actually, it's before the cameras now. It was moved up hastily on RKO Radio's program, lest someone "bump off" Schickelgruber before the picture could be released.

Yes, "the best-laid schemes o' mice an' men gang aft a-gley." It reminds your correspondent of a time when there was trouble in San Francisco's Chinatown. One Hop Sing Lee had been marked for liquidation. Unfortunately, the bullet wiped out an innocent bystander, Willie Fung. Next day Willie's widow received a note:

"Excuse, please. Mere slip of tong."

Real Thing

In the role of Commander Corydon M. Wassell in a De Mille picture at Paramount, Gary Cooper will wear the actual Navy Cross awarded to the former Arkansas country doctor for heroism in Java during the Japanese invasion.

Command Performance

In "This Is the Army" now on the screen at the Metropolitan in its fifth downtown week, Kate Smith sings "God Bless America" at President Roosevelt's behest. It was the only thing lacking in the stage show, he said when he saw that, so the producers included it in the film

HEDDA HOPPER

Hollywood Circus

Hollywood, Calif., Sept. 10. — Charlie Chaplin has definitely shelved all plans for producing "Shadows and Substance," the film project for which he was training Joan Barry. Which is a reminder that, under cover, the heavy legal batteries have now been swung into position for the great spectacle of Barry versus Chaplin, which is scheduled soon to open an indefinite stand in the courts and provide the Nation with its first Hollywood circus since l'affaire Flynn. The secret connivings and covert moves in Miss Barry's paternity suit would curl your hair, and I'm told that when-and-if the case comes before a judge there will be unfolded a gruesome record with no holds barred, no punches pulled, and plenty of hitting in the clinches. Joan's calmly awaiting the arrival of her baby in her Westwood hideout and in the meantime it's said all is far from serene in the Chaplin-O'Neill castle on the hill.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN

Brevities

Shortest screen career to date: Willard Parker's. After scoring smartly in his first film, "Ten Per Cent Women," opposite Rosalind Russell, Willard's been tagged for the Army and goes in September 15 . . . Pola Negri's negotiating to star in "Zaya" and in "Magda" for a Mexico City producing outfit and will play the roles in Spanish . . . Mitchell Leisen's next after "Frenchman's Creek" will be the comic opera, "The Count of Luxembourg," and he's angling for Rise Stevens to play her first Technicolor role . . . Jinx Falkenberg's off for Mexico City with Paulette Goddard.

New Idea

Harry Cohn tells me he's committed himself to the screening of a picture which he believes will be the most potent frankly propaganda service Hollywood has given to the country. He's titling it "A Nazi in the U. S. A." and it's to relate the adventures of a German prisoner of war who gets his first glimpse at the Statue of Liberty from a prison ship. Reactions of a bred-in-the-bone Hitlerite to our way of life, our philosophy of respect for the individual and our hard-earned democractic liberties form the theme of the story now being prepared by Griffin Jay. No cast has been lined up, but Sam White is set to produce and Cohn hopes to have Bill Shirer out here to throw in touches.

Bathtubs

Maria Montez in "Ali Baba" tops her fur-lined bathtub gag of "The Arabian Nights" and moves right up to the ragged edge of what the censors will stand for. She has two bathtub scenes in her new one and a different tub for each, the more fetching being an affair of Grecian marble in which she throws her curves at Jon Hall in a midnight pool affect.

Vallee on Tour

Rudy Vallee has taken off with his 28-piece Coast Guard band for appearances in Indianapolis, Marion, and Terre Haute, Ind., and Columbus, Ohio, in connection with the current Government war bond drive . . . Just before leaving Rudy told me something about his outfit, of which he's terrifically proud. Cats and jivers will recognize some of his stars: Andy Secrest of the sizzling trumpet, formerly with Paul Whiteman; Bobbie Maxwell, the hot harpist; Al Hendrickson, Benny Goodman's swing guitarist, and Dave Wade, Ray Noble's clowning trumpeter. "One and all," says Rudy, "the boys have put in for active sea duty on account of because they're all in. We're just celebrating our first anniversary as a group and in that time we've played a thousand performances, sold four million dollars worth of bonds as admission prices, dedicated ships, and goodness knows what." . . . Rudy himself went in as a chief petty officer altho over age, and now is a senior lieutenant. Manager of the gang is Maxwell Sturges. The band travels under high priority, but can't fly because it carries a ton of instruments.

Cheesecake Is Out

Observing the conservative pose of Lois Collier when she sat for the news fotogs on the occasion of being divorced, I inquired around and learned that Universal studio has forbidden any further torso displays by its starlets seeking legal relief from unwanted mates . . . Elyse Knox took her legal unsplicing with becoming gravity, purposely hiding a brace of Hollywood's shapeliest gams. Glad to see it. There's been a slight overdose of circusing the divorce courts . . . Columbia Cover Girl Helen Muller pooh-poohs the rumor linking her with Mickey Rooney. Mickey doesn't. She displays a bracelet given her by Ensign Bill Geyer, a very upstanding Colgate and Chicago Bears gridder, and carols, "Geyer's my guy." Mickey confides to pals that he'll escort her altarward in January.

Dinah Shore's Next

Dinah Shore takes her throaty contralto to Universal for "Three Cheers for the Boys" as soon as she finishes "Up in Arms." Also signed for this musical biggie are Bill Fields, Sophie Tucker, George Raft, Ted Lewis and his band, with Eddie Sutherland at the controls . . . Martha O'Driscoll's still hoping to wed her Lieut. Comdr. Richard C. Adams next week, though as of the weekend she didn't know where he might be on the broad bosom of the Pacific . . . Susanna Foster's seriously ailing in a New York hotel.

LEONARD LYONS

Gossip From Gotham

New York, Sept. 10.

Bernard Baruch was approached by a noted movie producer who wants to make a movie based on the fabulous career of the famed industrialist. "It will make a great picture," the producer promised. "And what a story—head of the War Industries Board in the last war, and now the busiest man in America, in this war" . . . "How would I be sure that the portrayal would be accurate?" asked Baruch . . . "Oh, that's easy," the producer assured him. "We wouldn't do a thing without your supervision" . . . "Then it's no go," said the busiest man in America in this war. "No man should take time off from the war."

Louis B. Mayer, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, loves to play two-handed pinochle players in Hollywood, and so he had a difficult time finding an opponent. At last he discovered a musician employed at his studio, and they began to play. "Let's not pay up after each game," Mayer suggested. "Let's just keep score for a while. It'll save a lot of bother—my having to pay you, then you having to pay me. Let's just keep track of how we're doing" . . . The game promises to be an interminable one. For, although no money has been passed as yet, the score shows that the musician owes Mayer $78,000.

Some Marine veterans of the South Pacific campaigns were at Roseland, where they related a few of their experiences to some of the eager hostesses. One told of having witnessed a ceremony where a tribal chieftain married a flock of young ladies. The native marriage performer asked the chief whether he was accepting these ladies as his wives. The groom grunted his assent. The brides then were asked if they were accepting the chief as their husband. The girls chanted, in unison, the equivalent of "We do." But the native marriage performer wasn't satisfied. He shouted: "Some of you girls there in the back will have to speak louder, if you want to get in on this."

Some years ago Dalton Trumbo write a best-selling pacifist novel, "Johnny Got His Gun"—about a soldier whose arms and legs were shot off, whose eyes were blinded and who could neither hear nor speak . . . Trumbo was signed to write the screen story of Capt. Ted Lawson's "30 Seconds Over Tokyo" . . . Captain and Mrs. Lawson visited Trumbo recently. They never had read his book, but knew that it had been dramatized for radio, and that he had a recording of the broadcast. They urged him to play the recording of "Johnny Got His Gun," and Trumbo obliged them. Mrs. Lawson, whose husband lost his leg in the bombing of Tokyo, said: "Good story. But I am unimpressed."

Vincent Sardi, jr., son of the Broadway restaurateur, now is a lieutenant in the Marines, supervising the officers' mess at the Marine Air Station in Cherry Point . . . Lieutenant Sardi came to New York on leave. And when he returned to Cherry Point, he brought with him Dick Rattazzi, the head waiter at Sardi's restaurant. Rattazzi will work as a civilian at the officers' mess . . . And despite the manpower shortage in Manhattan's restaurants, Lieutenant Sardi is making further raids into his father's employes. The chef notified the senior Sardi that he expects to leave on vacation next month—and spend the vacation working for Lieutenant Sardi.

Masons' 150th Anniversary Rites Tonight

The 150th anniversary of Federal Lodge No. 1, F. A. A. M., to be celebrated tonight at 8 p. m. in Almas Temple, marks the founding of an organization whose history parallels that of the Capital itself.

Prominent members and honorary members have included Presidents Andrew Jackson and Theodore Roosevelt Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd and J. Edgar Hoover.

But in September of 1793, when nine Washington citizens received a charter for the first Masonic lodge in the City of Washington proper, the Capital was young and unformed.

The nine Master Masons were prominent locally, all being engaged at the time in the construction of the President's House—as it was then called—and the Capitol Building of the United States. As a matter of fact, James Hoban, first master of the lodge, designed and superintended the buildnig of both edifices.

Washington President

With President George Washington as guest of honor, the members turned out in splendid regalia that year to lay the cornerstone of the Capitol. Six years later, they were to parade again, this time in sorrow, as the Father of his Country was laid to rest.

Master Mason Hoban was also a meticulous historian. In August, 1793, he undertook a census of the Washingotn populace.

"The number," he reported, "exceeds 820, and for the last six months there has been no death of either man or woman taken place in the city."

"It is to be observed," he added, a bit smugly, "that of the above number a great proportion are artists in the different branches of building, and from different parts of America and Europe."

Encountered Shortages

Shortages of material and labor seem to have limited the building industry in those days almost as seriously as they do today. After much delay, however, Hoban completed "Old Federal's" first meeting place, on New Jersey ave. se., the site of the present new house office building.

Fifteen Masons attended that first meeting. Tonight, at the sesquicentennial anniversary of the lodge's founding, 463 members and their guests will celebrate the event.

Principal address will be delivered by Grand Master Carl H. Claudy of the grand lodge of the District of Columbia. Master Roy L. James will give the salutation, with historical sketches of life in the Capital 150 years ago to be presented by Historian John C. Proctor and Past Master Van Arnum.

Strictly Stag

Girl Reporter 'Crashes' Round Table

By Jean Reiff
Post Staff Writer

"Glad to have you here," gulped the chairman, as this reporter horned in on a strictly stag luncheon meeting of the Knights of the Round Table.

Sent out to cover the informal talk of Francis St. Austell, secretary of the Community War Fund's speakers' bureau, I unexpectedly found myself the center of attention.

Mine, it seems, was the honor of being the first nonspeaking, nonentertaining woman guest ever to attend a Knights of the Round Table luncheon. And with 35 dignified business and professional gentlemen paying me attention, I felt like Eve in a garden of Adams.

My plan was to sit quietly in the back of the room and take notes on St. Austell's talk, but instead was called to the head of the table.

Biggest qualm of the day came when the vice president called the meeting to order and announced solemnly, "It is my privilege to introduce to you a young lady from The Washington Post who is one of our guests today."

"My gosh, maybe I'm supposed to make a speech," I thought and was about to head under the table. My day was saved, though, when he made it clear I was only to stand up and take a brief bow.

Honors came my way when I was asked to draw names for the prizes. Luck was with me; I was saved the embarrassment of drawing my own name.

Girl's Death To Be Probed By Coroner

Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald will conduct an investigation today at 10 a. m. into the death of Miss Joan H. Cross, 27, who was pronounced dead on arrival at Emergency Hospital yesterday after she had been discovered crawling down the hall at her home in Idaho Hall, Arlington Farms, Arlington, Va.

According to Arlington police, Eleanor McMahon, assistant director of the Arlington Farms, found Miss Cross in a hallway.

At Emergency Hospital at was reported that physicians could find no cause of death and said there were no marks on her body that could give them a clew.

Arlington County police also said that in event suspicious circumstances were found the case would be investigated by the FBI as Arlington Farms is Federal property.

Miss Cross was employed at the Pentagon Building. She is from Superior, Wis., and came here last June.

Georgetown To Graduate 64 Tomorrow

Senator Patrick A. McCarran (Democrat) of Nevada, chairman of the Senate District Committee, will address the graduating class of Georgetown University tomorrow at 3 p. m. in Gaston Hall.

Sixty-four students will receive diplomas, including five from the law school, 38 from the college, 20 from the school of foregin service and 3 from the school of nursing.

Honorary degrees of doctor of law will be conferred upon Senator McCarran and Dr. Hugh J. Fegan, newly appointed dean of Georgetown Law School. Dr. Fegan succeeded Dean George E. Hamilton when the latter retired last June.

Dr. Fegan has been on the law faculty 32 years, during much of that time he served as assistant dean. He is a graduate of both the college and the law school.

Because of war activities commencement exercises will be restricted to one day. Baccalaureate mass will be celebrated in Dahlgren Chapel at 10:30 a. m.

On Monday, 850 Army engineers are expected to begin basic training on the campus. The Army reclassification unit under which approximately 1000 soldiers have been making their home on the campus will be discontinued when the basic training is set up.

Adm. Tarrant Wins Legion of Merit For U-Boat Fights

The Legion of Merit was given yesterday to Vice Admiral William T. Tararnt of 2141 Wyoming ave. nw., it was announced by Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, for his service in antisubmarine operations.

Admiral Tarrant, who is now 63, was on duty in the First Naval District, with headquarters in Boston.

Comdr. Bartholomew W. Hogan, USN Medical Corps, whose relatives live at Emmitsburg, Md., and whose heroism was evidenced at the time of the sinking of the Wasp, received the Silver Star medal for his part in this engagement, Secretary Knox said.

AGE 53

Come, my friends, let's listen to our Government, shower with bonds as much as possible, the more the better. That will make us friends with the enemy. Peace forever. That will save the people. Every minute counts. President Lincoln said, "A stitch in time saves nine, yet more in war."

Teacher Need Normal, Officials Say

Parental alarm that the manpower shortage may hit Jacks' and Jills' classrooms was eased yesterday by District public school officials who asserted that the number of teacher vacancies this fall are strictly average.

Vacancies there are, they admitted, but local schools will not reopen until September 20, and the existing gaps are being filled rapidly.

"The fact that the list of eligible persons established on the basis of examinations is not great enough to fill the vacancies does not necessarily mean that there is a teacher shortage in Washington," Robert L. Haycock, assistant superintendent of schools, stated yesterday.

Specialists Needed

Haycock explained that the positions left open by war job seekers and servant-short mothers are being filled to a large extent by competent teaching women whose husbands or daughters are recent Government recruits. Because the manpower scene is changing daily, as more applications are filed, he said that it was impossible to state accurately the number of instructors who will report next Friday.

Most acute need in local classrooms is for the specialist—the teacher trained to instruct hard-of-hearing students, the print or wood shop crafts. Higher-paying jobs have attracted their talents from Washington schools.

"The greatest difficulty" in the senior high schools is obtaining physics instructors, Dr. Chester W. Holmes, assistant superintendent of schools, declared. "The Government is commandeering every man with that type of knowledge for research work," he explained.

Junior High's 'in Good Shape'

But other senior high vacancies are being filled as they occur.

As for the junior high schools—"we're in pretty good shape," Lawson J. Cantrell, assistant superintendent in charge, said optimistically. He added thatt here were, however, still posts open for one teacher each in the science, mathematics, printing, wood shop and physical education departments.

"A great many resignations were handed in this summer," Miss B. E. Taylor, assistant in charge of elementary schools, allowed, "but there are enough competent teachers to assure a complete staff through the lower grades."

Nazis In Rome

German troops have moved in and occupied Rome. This is the strange and bewildering sequel to the Italian government's unconditional surrender to the Allies and the armistice that followed. Apparently the Italian troops in the Eternal City lacked the heart or the capacity to prevent the Germans from disarming them and seizing key points in the Italian capital. Italian resistance in Rome as elsewhere has proved feeble. So wishful hopes that the Italians, having quit the Axis camp, would effectively aid us in helping to clear Italy of the hated Germans have been dashed to the ground. At the same time it is evident that despite the fact that the Italian surrender occurred on September 3, our forces were still unprepared a week later to move in on Rome. The net is that we shall have to fight to occupy Italy, since all of the peninsula north of Rome is, in greater or lesser measure, in enemy hands.

The long-range advantages in this transformation of Italy into a German-Allied battlefield are, however, very largely with the Allies. To supply their troops in Rome and north of Rome the Germans for the most part must depend on rail communications running down the spine of the kingdom. Some of these communications are within easy reach of Allied sea power, and all of them are within reach of Allied air power. The Germans also have facing them the task of keeping order in some of Italy's largest cities, such as Genoa, Milan, Turin and Rome, and keeping an increasingly hostile population in check. Despite Hitler's assurances to the German people that the defection of Italy means nothing, and will not prevent Germany from winning the war, and despite such temporary victories as the occupation of Rome, the surrender of Italy still represents the worst psychological blow which Germany has received and a tactical defeat the consequences of which will mount up with the passage of time.

Wasting Manpower

Amid the clamor for reconsideration of the father draft, we hope that Congress will not forget the mischief worked by some other restrictions as to the placement of men for wartime service. The so-called Pace amendment, for example, is crippling the seasonal movement of farm labor and thus making it the more difficult to get crops harvested. Actually the Pace amendment does nothing more than forbid the use of Government funds for transportation of farm workers outside the county in which they live unless the county agent finds that there is a surplus of farm labor in that county. Many farm workers have erroneously supposed, however, that this provision forbids them to move from State to State with the harvest season as they are accustomed to do in peacetime.

Some of the damage done by this ill-considered bit of legislation can be counteracted by educating the people as to its precise meaning. But it is still bad enough when the misleading impression it created has been corrected. It prevents the use of Federal funds to move farm workers to areas where the need for them is greatest. County agents, being dependent for most of their salaries upon the farmers of their respective communities, are not likely to certify that a surplus of farm labor exists unless a serious condition of unemployment should develop. They have no means whatever of weighing the respective manpower requirements of their own counties against those of other counties a few miles or a few hundred miles away. Of course, they should never have been asked to decide whether or not workers in their communities should be helped in taking more urgent jobs elsewhere. Farm workers cannot possibly be used to the best advantage until full control over funds for their transportation is given to the War Manpower Commission or the War Food Administration.

There is complaint also about the working of the Tydings amendment requiring Selective Service boards to defer agricultural workers deemed essential to success of the food program. This amendment was passed at a time when workers were flocking from farms into war plants. A critical situation had developed and something had to be done to stop denuding the farms of their manpower. The Tydings amendment has helped to produce a back-to-the-farm movement of considerable proportions. While that movement is salutary in general, it has had unfortunate effects upon some war industries. And a few farms are apparently becoming havens for draft dodgers. This does not appear to be an essential consequence of the Tydings amendment, since it leaves a good deal of discretion to the local draft boards. In some instances, however, the minimum farm production required to justify deferment of potential soldiers is far too low. Waste of manpower on the farm is just as comforting to the enemy as waste of manpower in war plants or the Army. It shouldn't be tolerated anywhere.

War Information

Bit by bit the Office of War Information is bringing its picture of the war into focus for the American people. Mauled by Congress and bullied by the armed services, the domestic branch of the agency, under the leadership of its vigorous new director, Palmer Hoyt, now shows some lively signs of rejuvenation. It has lately scored a significant gain in its vitally important job of promoting "an informed and intelligent understanding . . . of the status and progress of the war effort." Mr. Hoyt and Elmer Davis, it is reported, have persuaded President Roosevelt to reinforce their authority to govern the information policies of the Army and the Navy.

OWI has always had this authority—in theory. In practice, it has been negated at almost every crucial turn by the insistence of the men with epaulets, that release of information would endanger military security. Against such an argument advanced by military or naval chiefs, the civilians in OWI were helpless. Henceforth, however, if they disagree with the contention of the service officers, they can lay the case for final determination before the Commander in Chief. It is not likely that Mr. Roosevelt will be burdened with the decision of many disputes. But the very fact that he has manifested a concern about them should give OWI substantial leverage. And if he decides once or twice in favor of the civilian point of view, the traditional reticence of the armed services may be overcome. The test will lie in the firmness with which the President supports his own directive.

OWI will have to continue, of course, to work with, and through, the Army and Navy authorities. Its success will depend, in the last analysis, upon its ability to educate them to a more liberal news policy. Security must always be the basic consideration in the release of news, though our security must be elastically interpreted to include a responsibility to the American people. However, neither the OWI, nor the press, nor the public wants to wrest from the fighting forces any information that will imperil their safety or their strategy. The objective is to report all the news consistent with the requirements of security, but to report it in such a way as to reveal the progress of the war in sound perspective.

One indication that this objective is being approached may be found in the recent decision to permit publication of photographs showing American casualties. An overdose of such photographs would be unhealthy. But in proper proportion they can help us to understand something of what has been sacrificed for the victories we have won. Against a tough and resourceful enemy, every gain entails a cost. To gloss over this grim fact is to blur our vision. If we are to behave as adults in meeting our civilian responsibilities, we must be treated as adults. This means simply that we must be given the truth without regard to fears about how we may react to it.

One cannot wholly avoid the suspicion that the Government is now letting us see something of the grimmer side of war because it considers us overoptimistic and wants to correct our attitude. This sort of manipulation of public opinion has bedeviled information policy since the beginning of the war. It is intolerable in a democratic society. It will necessarily be forever engaged in correcting the errors of outlook which it has bred through its own distortions. The Army, and to an even greater degree the Navy, have shown themselves to be devotees of this auto-intoxicating process. Above all else, OWI needs to wean them from the notion that they can alternately dose the public with stimulants or depressants in accordance with the mood they desire to create.

Elmer Davis, it should be noted, has recognized this from the commencement of his public career. When he first took over the reins at OWI, he said that he did not consider himself to be concerned with the morale of the American people. Both he and Palmer Hoyt are newsmen. They know from experience what news the public needs and wants. They can be of immense service, if they are given the opportunity, to the armed services and to the President himself. They appear to have made a fresh and hopeful start in this direction. We hope they will move forward.

Harder Goal

The Third War Loan drive aims at raising 15 billion dollars—a considerably smaller sum than the 18½ billion dollars obtained from the last April loan drive. However, the September objective is really harder to attain because commercial banks are excluded from participation. Nonbanking investors are being called upon to raise the entire 15 billions. Last April they contributed 12½ billion dollars, or 2½ billions less than is asked of them this time. Everyone must accordingly contribute on the average 20 per cent more than he did last April in order that the minimum goal might be met. So the task confronting the volunteer salesmen is far from easy. They must induce more people to buy bonds and do their utmost to persuade former purchasers to step up subscriptions.

Although it has been said many times, it cannot be repeated too often that the raising of funds from commercial banks is a comparatively easy inflationary financing operation, because payment can be made by setting up credits for Treasury account. As the balances are withdrawn the sums spent are deposited in banks, the volume of money in use is increased, and the effort to keep prices from rising becomes all the more difficult. In this current drive all the funds will be contributed by individuals, institutions holding the savings of the public and corporations with surplus funds to invest. Dollars thus contributed take money out of the pockets of consumers and reduce the volume of deposits available for spending by the public by transferring them to the Government.

While the lion's share of nonbanking subscriptions will undoubtedly come, as previously, from corporations and from insurance companies and savings banks that are the depositories of the people's savings, the volume of individual contributions will provide a significant measure of the willingness of the average American civilian to forego present satisfactions by using current income to buy bonds. Failure of the people to respond to appeals to support the bond drive to the limit of capacity would not force the Government to go without needed funds. In that case, pressure would be put upon institutional investors to buy more bonds and commercial banks would be called upon to carry a larger percentage of the debt than had been planned for. But the more individuals subscribe, the more striking is the evidence of that unity and determination to win on which President Roosevelt rightly laid stress in opening the loan drive.

Sales Tax

The Ways and Means Committee appears to have had a change of heart. Members are meeting in executive session with a view, it is said, to deciding how much more of the cost of the war can be met out of current incomes. A short time ago it looked as if Congress might be content to pass the withholding-tax law—which is no tax at all, but a means of collecting taxes already voted—and thereafter permit excess income from Government spending to accumulate at an alarmingly rapid rate. Representative Knutson, indeed, reminds his colleagues of a gentleman's agreement not to raise individual taxes in 1943 or 1944. He still professes opposition to any increase in individual income-tax levies. But he, too, concedes that "war needs may drive us to it."

However, increases in income taxes are not the only source from which additional revenues could be derived. There is a sales tax. The hostility toward sales-tax proposals has been one of the major obstacles to tapping an abundant source of new revenue and to mopping up more income in the lower-income groups where the inflationary pressure caused by wage increases is greatest. With Chairman Doughton at last convinced that "in a great emergency any kind of tax is worthy of consideration," the coming committee deliberations and hearings hold out a promise of a really rewarding search for the 12 billion dollars in taxes that the President has requested.

Now It's Coal

Last year many householders, business concerns and institutions responded to impassioned appeals to use coal instead of oil as a fuel. Conversion was costly in terms of money, time and materials, and now it appears that it may have been a very unwise expenditure. For Secretary Ickes warns us that the coal situation "is bad and it's going to get worse." While Mr. Ickes indicates that the necessity of furnishing coal to the military services in Italy has increased the drain on supplies, the increased military demands for coal are obviously not the chief explanation for the existing coal crisis. The outstanding reasons for dangerously low coal stockpiles are the repeated strikes that cut output about 25 million tons this year. If further work stoppages should occur because of failure of John L. Lewis to reach an agreement with the mine operators with whom he is now conferring, the outlook would be decidedly bleak. The disconsolate occupants of ill-heated houses, dormitories and classrooms would be more resigned to their coming fate if they could be persuaded that the war is responsible for their sufferings. But the facts tell a different story.

BURIAL ON ATTU

No spring ever like this spring,
No sowing like this sowing;
Chill breath from the planet's rim,
A wolf wind blowing.
Stark light from a steel sky,
Pale waves sighing,
Gaunt cliffs crowned with rime,
A lean gull, crying.

Over the frozen valley
Labors the giant plow,
Scooping the tortured furrows
Measured and even, now.
Grim-lipped sowers follow,
Setting the precious seed
Each in its narrow shelter,
Deep enough for its need.
Never a hope for harvest,
Only a prayer and a stone,
And a hidden waterfall singing
A requiem for its own.

No spring ever like this spring,
No sowing like this sowing;
Chill breath from the planet's rim,
And a wolf wind blowing.

Argentine Payoff

IF ANY doubt ever existed that the group of men controlling Argentina's destiny since the military revolt have allowed themselves to get out of touch with reality, that doubt was exploded with publication of the note that Foreign Minister Storni sent to Secretary Hull on August 5. This note complained plaintively that Argentina is being "misunderstood," stated that the government could not and would not break relations with the Axis "without a motive," and as final effrontery, suggested that the United States should send Argentina arms to "restore equilibrium," that is, bring her military power up to Brazil's.

Secretary Hull's forthright refusal of this curious request and his chapter and verse recital of Argentina's failure to live up to her obligations to hemisphere defense has brought a quick and very favorable reaction from the other American republics. Newspapers and radio commentators in Uruguay, Mexico, Colombia and elsewhere came out at once to express amazement at Argentina's move and to applaud Secretary Hull's firm and pointed reply.

Extraordinary Demand

Observers all over the hemisphere are busy trying to figure out just why the Argentine government chose at this particular time to make such an extraordinary demand on the United States to supply arms to a nation with Argentina's record of dubious neutrality. The Ramirez government has been doing a number of unfriendly things—and excuses have been made for them on the grounds of inexperience. But inexperience cannot cover this last move. The Ramirez group apparently wanted a public showdown—and forced one.

There seems to be no reason to think that this was done for effect on any outside nation. The Axis is obviously losing the war—Storni noted as much in his letter. The United States stand in refusing lease-lend was clear-cut months ago. Opinion in other New World republics has been consistently unfavorable to Argentina's selfish noncooperation on many measures vital to the defense of the hemisphere. This leaves one explanation—that it was done for effect on Argentine opinion.

The revolutionary Ramirez government has been making a big play as cleaner-upper and straightener-outer of bad things that their predecessors did. They point with pride to corruption uncovered, to curbs on rising prices, to war on speculators. The catch in their performance is that they promised to change Argentina's foreign policy to one more favorable to the United Nations' cause, yet certain elements within the government have been able to go to extremes of unfriendliness that even Castillo never dared to show.

So what could be neater than to provoke an incident that would make Argentines feel that they were being treated very unfairly by the United States?

Argentine Press

The fact that the Ramirez government made a point of announcing that the Argentine press would be very free to comment on the notes bears this supposition out. In releasing the notes for publication, official sources let it be known that the press could hold a sort of editorial plebiscite. What happened afterward indicates that they expected the press to come out with indignant nationalistic expressions.

If they hoped this, they were disappointed. The great majority of responsible Argentine newspapers, not in favor of the Ramirez policy, yet afraid to oppose it, kept conspicuously silent. The German-subsidized El Pappeco, of course, said neutrality must be guarded. One paper alone, the pro-democratic Noticias Graficas, came out with an editorial condeming the Ramirez foreign policy. Final editions of this issue were seized and the paper has been suspended for an indefinite time.

The whole incident has proved a boomerang to the men who provoked it. There has been an internal struggle in the group that set up Argentina's military dictatorship from the first day. The men who have wanted to carry out early promises to break relations with the Axis have been outmaneuvered so far.

But the failure of the "editorial plebiscite" that the Storni letter must have been intended to set off was so complete that this group plucked up its courage and asked for an outright break. In spite of officials' denials, a cabinet crisis was provoked Thursday and a showdown struggle between these two factions began. It resulted in Storni's resignation.

The situation is such that Argentina can only change her foreign policy if the stand-pat group within the inner circle is overridden by insurgents among that small circle. The Axis obviously will not perform any hostile act to give Argentina the "motive" the stand-patters say they must have. Storni is known as one of the pro-democratic group. His resignation is taken to mean that the stand-pat clique is still the strongest. It was now or never for Argentina, and as things are now it looks very much like never.

The Guns Boom Out In Moscow

THE DISTANCE between Stalingrad and Stalino is somewhat over 350 miles as the crow flies. The distance between Stalino and Przymysl, which the Germans captured almost at the outset of the Russian campaign, is just over 700 miles.

Thus the German tide which swept over Russia during the summer months of 1941 has now receded a full third of the way. But that means that the Red Army must yet advance twice as far as it has done since the tide on the Eastern Front finally began to turn last winter.

AN IMMENSE task still confronts the Russians as it still confronts us.

All of White Russia, a large part of the Ukraine, all of the Crimea, all of Poland, Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Denmark, Norway, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, Luxembourg, Greece, Yugoslavia and an important part of Italy are still in German hands.

The Axis lies shattered. But it was only the weaker end that disintegrated. Hitler still commands a tremendous aggregation of force. And at no point are the Allies nearer than 600 miles from Berlin. Very hard fighting may have to take place before the flags of the United Nations are hoisted over the Brandenburger Tor, Unter den Linden and the Siegesallee.

BUT MILITARY distances are deceptive. They include not merely miles but also momentum and morale.

In other words, the Red army in advancing from Stalingrad to Stalino has covered far more than a third of the way to victory. By the same token Italy's unconditional surrender means a good deal more than the completion of one-third of the task before the Anglo-American Allies.

The fact that Russia's present victories are taking place more than two years after the German assault on the Soviet Union was launched and more than four years after Germany began to make war, gives these victories a dynamic importance that cannot be exaggerated.

Every time the guns boom out in Moscow it is a reminder to Hitler not only that he has lost another Russian city—Orel or Belgorod or Taganrog or Stalino or Bachmach—but also that he has lost the war.

Every mile we advance, up the boot of Italy, bitterly contested as that advance may be, will bring us that much nearer by air to Germany's refugee war industries in Austria and Czechoslovakia.

The Allied pendulum swings in ever widening curves and the pit in which the Germans crouch is not deep enough for them safely to hide in.

DESPAIR is beginning to grip the German mind. The world they find themselves living in today is not the world they bargained for when with docility or enthusiasm they accepted Hitler and did his bidding.

There is confusion in the high command, confusion in the Nazi hierarchy. The creation "in the name of Mussolini" of an Italian Fascist "government" is not the product of cold calculation, but a bewildered groping for an escape from the dilemma which the Italian surrender has created for the Reich.

The effect may very well be not to hamper the Allied occupation of Italy, but to bring Italy into the war against her erstwhile partner. And this possibility grows every time German planes bomb Italian warships, every time German troops seek to disarm Italian soldiers and as Hitler extends his tentacles over one city after another in the Po Valley and elsewhere in the kingdom.

THE ALLIES have reason to rejoice over the military course of events in Europe.

Events are moving fast. The collapse of Germany in a period of not too many months is a possibility that must be foreseen and planned against.

At the same time we must also be prepared for a period of extremely heavy and bitter fighting before that possibility becomes a reality.

The news from Russia is eloquent on that score.

This week the Germans were forced out of Stalino, great steel center of the Donets Basin. They had tried desperately to hold it. They had made it one of their most formidable strong points. But the Red Army was too much for them and they had to abandon the city. That was proof, if any more proof were needed, that the military balance has begun to swing strongly in Russia's favor.

In view of this circumstance and the possibility of ultimate defeat that it must present to German eyes, one might have assumed that the Nazis would begin building a bridge to the future. On the contrary, the more defeat stares them in the face the more savage they become.

During the few days in which the German army was able to hold up the Russians at Stalino German incendiary and murder gangs did their worst. "When the Germans realized they could not hold Stalino," says Alexander Werth in a dispatch to the New York Times, "they organized on the eve of their departure, September 7, one of the most hideous mass murders they have perpetrated."

We had better keep the Nazi mentality in mind in gauging the future. The last months of the war are likely to be, by all odds, the bloodiest.

"Hard Up" Midshipmen

I have been following your features daily in The Post regarding the huge spectacle that is being staged to open the third war loan. "Back the Attack" is certainly a fine idea and from the articles and pictures that have been appearing I should judge that this will be one of the greatest displays of military equipment ever.

In your Sunday issue I noticed that a galaxy of stars are appearing officially in a preopening ceremony of "Back the Attack." The midshipmen at the Academy would sure like to be there to witness such a collection of stars in one place. Well, to get to the point, and perhaps you will think we're nuts, why couldn't one of two of them sort of run up to Annapolis and give the boys a little show or maybe just pay us a short visit. Of course several of the boys and myself would sure like to get a good look at Lucille Ball, and who wouldn't?

It's only a matter of a few miles out of the way, so what do you say? Of course, the executive department would have to approve of the whole thing. But, then again, maybe I shouldn't have ever written this letter. But a group of us got together and thought it would be a darn good idea and wouldn't do any harm in writing.

Congratulations and lots of luck.

37 HARD-UP MIDSHIPMEN.

Editor's note: Of course, we immediately took up this suggestion with the Navy Department and we shouldn't be at all surprised to hear that Annapolis is, shall we say, favored.

Barking Dogs

I want to add my voice to that of Mr. Hall in protesting on barking dogs in Arlington. I'm sure Mr. Hall must live in Lyon Park, because I'm sure nowhere in the county are there more barking dogs than in Lyon Park.

There is no chance to sleep after 5 o'clock in the morning and you are lucky if you can get to sleep before 11 o'clock in the evening.

I may be wrong, but I think human beings should have more consideration than dogs.

P. O. Employes

Today is Labor Day. Everyone is asked to work, and yet there is no mail delivery and all postoffice branches are closed.

Mail delivery is the most important branch of the Government service and highly important to business. Why keep an office force on duty on Labor Day when there is not even one delivery?

Labor is working—even the coal miners. The Government as a whole is on the job—all but the Postoffice Department. Is it too much to ask them to even work a half day and get at least some of the mail delivered?

The press announced that all governmental agencies were working today, so instead of giving my crew a holiday I made all appear as a patriotic duty and to follow the example set by the Government. However, when it was learned that there was no mail, all went home.

Budapest Quartet

Now that we are to hear again the Budapest Quartet, we should pause for a moment to pay tribute to the rare soul who has made possible these concerts. Surely, she understands fully the meaning of Edwin Arlington Robinson's lines:

"Two kinds of gratitude: the sudden kind
We feel for what we take, the larger kind
We feel for what we give."

While peevish critics scratch with caustic pen their condemnation of another Brahms or Beethoven cycle, we, the listeners, would like to tell what the Budapest Quartet means to us.

As we sit in the darkened auditorium, freed for two hours from the thought of the turmoil and conflict of the outside world, and as our four musicians play a Haydn quartet, perhaps for the 25th time, there comes to our minds a question from Euripides, which seems to be the only adequate reply to anyone who doubts the message of "the classics:"

"And shall not loveliness be loved forever?"

The Once Over

How To Buy War Bonds

Salesman—Good morning. I'm taking subscriptions to the third War Bond campaign and . . .

You—That's all I want to know! Come right in.

You—Forget it.

Salesman—Don't you think it's a good slogan?

You—Fine. But nothing makes me feel cheaper than to feel that I need a slogan to interest me in my OWN SURVIVAL.

* * * *

Salesman—Perhaps you would like me to explain some of the reasons given by our committee showing why you should buy these bonds.

You—Don't make me feel like a heel, please!

Salesman—you know the reasons?

You—I may be stupid, slow on the trigger and a little dumb on some matters, but I'm not such a fool that I have to be told why my country needs to win this war and how much it means to me personally.

* * * *

Salesman—I just thought you might like to hear some of the main points.

You—There's only one main point: Uncle Sam needs more money to lick the foulest, dirtiest crew of gangsters that ever threatened the world. If he doesn't lick them my country goes into the ash can. And where do I go? Into the bottom of that same ash can. And it's very hot and dirty down there.

Salesman—Now, let me explain a little further. You may subscribe in varying amounts. For some issues there is a limit of $5,000 in one year.

You—That's too bad. They n't limit the wounds a soldier ca e in a single year!

* * * *

Salesman—What type of bond do you think you prefer?

You—Whatever type Uncle Sam will be helped by most.

Salesman—It doesn't matter to him.

You—Very well. I'll take some of each.

Salesman—How many can you afford?

Salesman—Why not?

You—It gives a buyer too much leeway. It leaves too much to his tightwad side. It isn't what a man can afford when his country is at war. It's how much he can help and still eat. You wouldn't ask a bombardier over Berlin how many hours of torture he could spare, would you?

* * * *

Salesman—Maybe I should ask you what do you feel is the limit of your investing power?

You—That's just as bad. What would happen if you asked an American boy landing on a Pacific beachhead under a murderous fire what's his limit in blood?

Salesman—He'd sock me in the nose.

You—I'll do the same if you ask me any more questions that make me feel like a heel. Step into the library. I've got a check all made out.

Mr. Welles

May I take space and time to thank you for your "pat" editorial on "Rooseveltian Rampage."

Mr. Pearson may at times step beyond the pale as far as truth and circumspection are concerned. But in this case he could scarcely cry loud enough about Mr. Welles' removal from the State Department.

From my observations, which may not be too broad, I have felt as you do that Mr. Welles has been the only positive force in that department. Do they henceforth intend to sit in noncommittal stupor until we are engulfed in the maelstrom? Or will there be forthright and definite action taken before it is too late?

Heaven help the State Department if Mr. Roosevelt won't.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Heart Of Europe

IF VICTOR EMMANUEL has not yet abdicated, it will be necessary that he do abdicate in the phase which will follow our landings in Italy. For Italy must in the nature of things do more than to surrender unconditionally. Italy cannot merely retire from a war which will be fought on and from Italian soil. Italy must range herself with the United Nations and against Germany. She must do this in order to hasten the end of the fighting in Italy and to limit the ravages of war. She must do it to redeem her self-respect and to regain her place among the nations.

LIPPMANN

But King Victor Emmanuel cannot preside over another reversal of Italy's alliances. He was the ally of the German Kaiser before the World War, and he went over to the other side. He was then the ally of Britain and France. Later he abandoned that alliance and rejoined the Germans. For the catastrophe which this has brought on his country, it was right and necessary that he should be the King to renounce the Axis and to surrender unconditionally. After that he can only abdicate. Italy cannot come effectively into our camp in the name of a King who has changed sides so often.

WHAT THE Italian nation decides eventually to do about the House of Savoy is none of our business. We are concerned not with the House of Savoy but with this particular King. He was ultimately responsible for the acceptance of fascism, for the Ethiopian war, for the intervention in Spain, for stabbing France and Britain in the back, and for the criminal assault on Albania, Greece, and Yugoslavia. For this reason it was an act of high statesmanship to insist upon treating with him for the surrender. But he will have to abdicate before the Italian nation can come back into the society of nations.

This does not mean that Italy will even then have resumed her rightful place. It does mean that the opportunity is open to the Italian nation to win back the place which they lost not only because of the weakness of the King and the crime of the Fascists but because for so long they themselves were weak and infatuated. The redemption of Italy cannot be achieved by surrendering to us and by the abdication of the King. The redemption of Italy will come from fighting the Germans, and making honorable amends to those who have been the victims of Italian fascism. By fighting the Germans the Italians can win back their self-respect. By making amends they can win forgiveness.

WE MAY be confident that in the highest quarters the real issues and the real values have been clearly appraised. Let us keep them clear in the public mind as well. Let us take to heart the injunction of a great French scholar: "Beware of too much explaining, lest we end by too much excusing." We may add: beware of being ourselves deceived by the actions which immediately it is expedient and wise to take. Let us not become sentimental and then enchanted by the King or his successor or by his government, but rather let us remember the past which is not yet redeemed until the Italians redeem it by their deeds.

Then we shall not fall into the error which was the source of the moral confusion of the Darlan affair. We shall deal with this interim government, giving it the chance to prove itself and to earn its way, yet avoiding scrupulously the mistake that was made about Darlan of promoting a propaganda to whitewash his record and to take him to our bosoms.

IT CANNOT be made too clear at this time, our Russian friends notwithstanding, that the battle for Italy is the battle for the heart of Europe. Italy is no mere outpost, and the Mediterranean is not the sea frontier of the Continent but the inland sea of the European world and the main highway of communication between the East and West. It is no accident that Rome was for centuries the capital of the ancient world, nor was it an accident that from the 7th to the 11th centuries, when Islam had closed the Mediterranean to the Europeans, all commerce and intercourse decayed in the cities and civilization of western Europe during the time which our schoolbooks call the Dark Ages.

We know now how unerring was the historical and strategical insight of Winston Churchill when in the last war he designed, though unhappily he was not permitted to carry through successfully, the campaign to open the Dardanelles and to reach Russia by sea. Had he prevailed and succeeded then, the world might well have been spared the frightful slaughter on the Western Front and all that followed from the bleeding white of the manhood of France and of Britain.

THE BATTLE for Italy is truly, as General Eisenhower has said, a main action for the decision and not a skirmish on the perimeter. The number of troops involved is no true measure of its importance. For our object is not, as the vulgar saying goes, to kill Germans but to crush the military power of Germany.

With Italy and the Mediterranean in our hands, with southern France, the Balkan Peninsula and the Danubian Plain outflanked and uncovered, and with the Black Sea routes to Russia opened, the war may not be over. But the German position will be hopeless, and the end will be clearly in sight.

German Education

By Ruth Moore
Washington Bureau of Chicago Sun

Postwar Proposals

Some of the country's outstanding educators will meet at Harpers Ferry, W. Va., Tuesday to formulate recommendations on what the United Nations should do at the end of the war to reeducate the children of Germany and other Axis-controlled countries.

The meeting has been called by the Liaison Committee for International Education, but the State Department and other agencies will have unofficial observers present. About 20 of the largest educational associations in the country and unofficial representatives of most of the United Nations will attend.

Although any recommendations arrived at will have no official status, it is hoped to lay them before the coming United Nations relief and rehabilitation conferences as the concerted opinion of educational groups. One section of the relief conference will be devoted to education.

At present, American and English educational opinion is divided on what course should be followed in Germany after the war, the Chicago Sun was told.

A London conference, representative of English educators, recently issued the following statement:

"For a period Germany is likely to be directly administered by the occupying powers and they should, in our opinion, exercise their control of education through a high commissioner for education who should be chosen in advance and ready to start work the moment the occupation begins.

"His purpose should be to eradicate the Nazi and militarist influence in education and to inspire, facilitate and to supervise measures by the German people for their own reeducation."

Text of Hitler's Speech Urging Greater Sacrifices

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 10.—The text of Adolf Hitler's radio speech, as recorded here by the Associated Press.

My German Volksgenossen and Genossinen (men and women compatriots):

Freed from the heavy burden of expectation pressing us for a long time, I now see that the moment has arrived to speak again to the German people without taking refuge in lies either to myself or to the public.

The collapse of Italy could be foreseen for a long time, not through lack of means on the Italian side for more efficient defense or by lack of German help, but by the failure or rather by the unwillingness of those elements who caused the capitulation as a result of their planful sabotage.

What has been accomplished now is the outcome of what these men have been striving at for years—the surrender of the Italian state leadership from the German Reich, allied with Italy, to their common enemies.

When England and France declared war on the German Reich in September, 1939, Italy would have been obliged by our treaties to declare her solidarity with Germany immediately. This solidarity was not only created by treaties, but also by fate assigned to both Germany and Italy by their enemies. It is known that Mussolini had the firm intention of ordering immediate mobilization in Italy in accordance with the treaties.

The same forces which now have brought about the capitulation succeeded in August, 1939, in preventing Italy from entering the war. As Fuehrer of German Reich I had to have an understanding for the extraordinary difficulties of Il Duce.

Therefore, I neither then nor later pressed Italy to observe her obligations.

On the contrary I completely left it to the Italian government either not to enter the war at all, or if so, at a moment most convenient to themselves, a moment which they should choose perfectly freeely.

Mussolini in June, 1940, had succeeded in achieving the prerequisite at home to join Germany, although at that time the fight had already been decided in Poland, as well as in Norway and against France and her allied British armies on the continent.

Nevertheless, I had to thank Il Duce for his attitude which, as it was known to me, could be achieved only with extreme difficulties within—not against the Italian people, but against certain circles.

Since that time the Reich and Italy have fought together on many battlefields, have shed their blood in common.

Not for one second have Il Duce and I doubted that the issue of this war will decide the "being or not being" of our peoples.

Germany Aided Ally

Accordingly, Germany, herself stricken in the heaviest battles, has helped her ally to the utmost possible limit.

Many offers of help have been entirely refused by the military rulers of Italy from the beginning, or were only accepted under chimerical conditions.

Evidence will be submitted to the public at the appropriate time proving what contributions Germany has made to her ally in their common fateful struggle, and was still prepared to make.

The German soldier himself has taken an attitude on these common battlefronts which distinguishes him everywhere, for without his intervention North Africa would have been lost for Italy as far back as in the winter of 1940-41.

The name of Marshal Rommel will be connected eternally with this German performance.

The Reich in the spring of 1941 decided to help Italy in the Balkans so as not to accomplish their own intentions but push aside the danger which had only to assist her ally and to arisen by the Allies' action and which naturally also menaced Germany.

Germany made all these sacrifices at the same moment a large scale Bolshevist offensive was expected hourly. She had more than enough to do with her own problems. The blood of numerous German soldiers, sealed our brotherhood in arms.

Calls Duce Greatest Leader

The German nation and I as its fuehrer could take this attitude, knowing that at the head of the Italian nation there was one of the greatest men which this century had produced—the greatest son of Italy since collapse of the Roman empire.

His unconditional faith gave our alliance the basis for success. His fall and the offenses done to him will be felt with deepest shame by future Italian generations. The last little push for a coup d'etat which had been decided upon long ago, came upon the demand of the Duce for increased powers necessitated in the interest of conduct of the war. The strictest measures against open and hidden saboteurs of th eItalian war effort, against the reactionary enemies of social justice and against the powers of resistance of the Italian nation were to serve their aim.

At the last minute Mussolini wanted to eliminate the sinister enemies of the Italian people in the battle of "to be or not to be" in order to guarantee the future of Italy. Great pain overcame me personally when I witnessed this injustice done to this man which is unique in history; when I saw the undignified treatment meted out to him. For 20 years he had only lived in permanent sorrow and preoccupation for the well-being of his people and they pushed him down to level of an ordinary criminal. I was and I am happy to have been allowed to call this great and faithful man my friend.

Faithfulness a Virtue

I have not learned to change my opinions according to current needs or to deny them. Though there are other opinions on this subject, I believe that in the life of nations, just as well as in the life of individuals, faithfulness is of indispensable value. Without it human society would not be stabilized and its organizations would crash sooner or later.

Even after this shameful event, German troops in Sicily; German pilots, U-boat crews and other units on land, sea and air, have done their duty to the fullest extent.

(Here a portion was omitted.)

Many things cannot b told today for reasons of tactical experience, but posterity will know that with the exception of a few courageous Italian troops there were mainly German troops from this time who defended with their life not only German Reich but also Italian soil.

Now that the Italian government has decided to break off its alliance and pull out of the war and thus make Italy a battlefield more than before, it may justify it with whatever reasons it can muster.

Calls Act Treason

It can justify it as necessity, but it will find no excuse for the fact that Italy's ally was not notified beforehand.

Not only did Badoglio ask the German charge d'affaires in Rome to come to his office on the day of the signature of the armistice but he assured him that he, Marshal Badoglio, would never betray Germany: that we should have confidence in him and that he would prove it by his deeds: that he was worthy of this confidence and that above all Italy would never capitulate. On that day of Italian capitulation the King called the German charge d'affaires and also assured him especially that Italy would never capitulate but would continue on Germany's side in good and bad luck.

Indeed, only one hour after the announcement of the treason the chief of the Italian general staff, Roatta, declared to our military plenipotentiary that this was nothing else but a wicked lie and British propaganda.

Scorns at Decision

At same moment a representative of the Italian Foreign Ministry gave the assurance that this information was a typical British swindle which he denied. Fifteen minutes later he admitted that the whole matter was true and that Italy had really gotten out of war.

In the eyes of democratic warmongers and in those of the present government this behavior may account for the brilliant example of tactical diplomacy.

History will judge differently and future generations of Italy will feel ashamed that these tactics had been employed toward an Allied friend who had more than fulfilled his duties according to the letter of treaties with blood and sacrifices of all kinds.

After I had a chance of observing the increasing influence of these reactionaries—also negative towards the social tasks of Italy—and the hostile circles towards Germany there was hardly any doubt left, since the fall of Mussolini, about the true intentions of this change of regime.

Therefore, I have ordered all measures in accordance with my duty which could be taken for this occasion in order to preserve the German Reich from the fate which Marshal Badoglio and his men have not only inflicted on the Duce and on the Italian people but into which they also want to draw Germany.

Italy a Liability

We all know that in this merciless struggle the defeated will be annihilated according to the wishes of our enemies. We are therefore willing always to take those measures with cold determination, mindful of details and of major issues which are liable to blot out the hopes of our adversaries. But also many honor-loving Italians have declared themselves to be firm allies fighting for both our peoples.

From the military point of view the loss of Italy means but little. The battle in this country for many months was supported and borne mainly by German troops. Now we can continue this fight free of all liabilities.

The attempt of international plutocracy to break the Germans' resistance like it did Italy's is childish. They confuse the German people with others. The hope of finding traitors like in Iitaly among Germans is based on complete ignorance of National Socialism.

Reich Firm, He Swears

Their hope of bringing about a 25th of July in Germany is based on the deep error they have with regard to my personal position as well as to the attitude of my political collaborators, fields marshals, admirals and generals. More than ever, German leadership will meet this intention. Every trial will only fortify our unity. Every personal life has long ceased to exist for myself personally. I work conscious of the fact that through my work I can secure the life of my people for many generations hence.

That I possess the right to believe in success unconditionally is not only based on my own life work but on the successes of our people in 1939. We had to accept the declarations of war of our enemies alone and abandoned. We have acted according to the principles that heroic resistance under all circumstances is preferable to cowardly submission. Therefore I declared on September 1, 1939 that neither time nor the power of arms would ever force the German people to its knees. Since then, the enemy has been pushed from the German frontiers more than 1000 miles through our own force alone. Only by air can the enemy terrorize the German hinterland. But here also technical and organizational means are growing which will not only break his terror attacks forever but will retaliate with other and more effective means.

Tactical necessities may force us during this tremendous fateful struggle sometimes to give up a position on one front or to evade special menaces. But the ring of steel forged by the German home front will never break. This ring protects the Reich held by the heroism of our soldiers.

At this moment I expect that the nation with dogged pride will fulfill its duty in all spheres of this tremendous fight. There is every reason to have confidence in it.

The party must be model in every respect.

The homeland can proudly look upon its soldiers who have engaged in heavy bloody fighting again and again and are fulfilling their task under most difficult circumstances.

On the other hand the front, in its painful hours during which frequent superhuman demands are imposed on it throughout many weeks and many months, may remember the homeland which today has also become a fighting front. The heroism of old people and of children, of mothers, women and girls is not surpassed. Therefore every soldier has the sacred duty to preserve still higher the steadfastness he has had so far and to do that which the fight demands from him.

The German people have never been so proud of themselves throughout the whole of their history as in this most gigantic struggle of all times.

Sees Defeat for Allies

All attempts to force the fate of an enslaved nation upon the German people will fail in the face of this will and this achievement. May every single German, regardless of his position or assignment be conscious that the fate of our nation and the future of many generations depends on his effort, on his willingness to sacrifice. Therefore I cannot thank with words the German people, men and women of the home front and soldiers, for all they are doing, for what they are suffering patiently and bearing readily. This will be expressed by future generations who will know that their free and socially secure life is the fruit of the sacrifices of our time. I, for myself, am unspeakably proud to be fuehrer of this people and I thank God for every hour He gives me which enables me to turn the greatest struggle of our times into a successful one.

The measures taken in Italy for the safeguarding of German interests are very hard. As far as they concern Italy they are already being carried out according to plan and are successful. The example of the treachery of Yugoslavia has given us a healthy knowledge beforehand. The fate of Italy may be a lesson for all of us never to forsake our national honor, not even in an hour of most bitter trial or utter darkness.

It will teach us to be faithful always to our Allies and to fulfill our duty with faithful hearts.

To the people who have passed these trials of destiny the Lord in the end will present the laurels of victory and the price of life. This must and will be Germany.

U. S. Foreign Policy

Shield Of The Republic

By WALTER LIPPMANN

The Monroe Doctrine

A new, different and momentous chapter of our history began in 1823. In that year the United States assumed an obligation outside of its continental limits. President Monroe declared that the United States would thereafter resist the creation of new European empires in this hemisphere. This momentous engagement was taken by President Monroe after he had consulted Madison and Jefferson.

They approved it only after Canning, the British Foreign Secretary, had assured the American Minister, Richard Rush, that Britain and the British Navy would support the United States. For the Founding Fathers understood the realities of foreign policy too well to make commitments without having first made certain they had the means to support them. They knew, as John Quincy Adams put it, that at that time the naval power of the United States was to that of Great Britain "as a cockboat in the wake of the British man-of-war."

Unfortunately, however, for the education of the American people in the realities of foreign policy—that commitments must be balanced by adequate power—the understanding with Britain, which preceded Monroe's Message, was never avowed. To this day most Americans have never heard of it. Yet as a matter of fact the two governments came very near making a joint declaration. On August 20, 1823, Canning, who was the British foreign secretary, had proposed to Richard Rush, the American Minister in London, that they sign a convention or exchange ministerial notes.

Rush held back from the joint declaration because there was a difference in the position of the two countries. The United States had recognized the independence of the Spanish-American nations in the year before the negotiations with England. Canning was not then willing to commit England that far, and would only suggest that she might promise the future acknowledgement of the South American States.

In the Cabinet discussions Calhoun, Secretary of War, and Southard, Secretary of the Navy, wished to give Rush discretionary power to act with Britain. John Quincy Adams, who was Secretary of State, and whose will prevailed, objected to joint action with Britain, on the ground that Britain and America, unless both recognized the Spanish republics, would not be "bound by any permanent community of principle."

The failure to reach a clear and binding agreement with Britain had very serious consequences some years later.

The American Civil War broke out in April, 1861. In October of that year France induced Great Britain and Spain to agree to joint intervention against the revolutionary government of Juarez in Mexico. This agreement, reached at a time when the United States was helpless, made it possible for Napoleon III to invade Mexico and enthrone Maximilian as emperor. In the absence of a permanent binding agreement with the United States, Lord John Russell, who had no liking for the enterprise, nevertheless did not oppose Napoleon and indeed joined in with him to the extent of sending a few hundred marines to Mexico. However, soon thereafter Britain withdrew and tried to persuade Napoleon to desist. Nevertheless, the enterprise went on while the United States was rent by civil war. We might have had to fight an international war in Mexico as soon as our own Civil War had been concluded. That we did not have to do this was a matter of good luck in that Maximilian was unfortunate in Mexico and Napoleon became involved in troubles at home.

This affair demonstrated how serious was the commitment of the Monroe Doctrine and how difficult it was to sustain the commitment in the absence of a clear and dependable agreement with Britain. For if Britain had opposed Napoleon at the outset, he could not have ventured into Mexico. If she had really supported him, the United States could not have forced him out.

Yet the American people, their minds on other things, never learned the lesson of this experience. Thus they were taught to believe that the immense obligation to protect the Western Hemisphere and consequently almost any other obligation we chose to assume, could be validated by American forces alone. Because the informal alliance with British sea power was concealed, and was displeasing to our self-esteem, we lost the prudence, so consistently practiced by the Founding Fathers, of not underestimating the risks of our commitments and of not overestimating our own power.

With this misunderstanding of the nature of foreign policy, the United States expanded its commitments far beyond the wide limits of the Monroe Doctrine. In 1867 Seward bought Alaska from Russia.

The territory of the United States was thus extended close to northeastern Asia—to within a few miles of Russian territory and to within a few hundred miles of Japan.

In the next two decades the American strategic frontier was extended into the Mid-Pacific. In 1878 a coaling station was established at Pago Pago in Samoa. In 1893-'98 the Hawaiian Islands were annexed. During the war with Spain the United States cruiser Charleston conquered Guam, and by the Treaty of Paris Spain ceded the Philippine Islands. This committed the United States to the defense of a large territory nearly 5000 nautical miles west of California. A few months after the Senate had ratified the treaty annexing the Philippines the Secretary of State, John Hay, wrote his notes on the Open Door in China. He followed them by issuing the "circular" of July 3, 1900, which declared that "the policy of the Government of the United States is to seek a solution which may"—among other things—"preserve Chinese territorial and administrative entity."

No further military commitment of any consequence was made by the United States during the twentieth century. The history of our foreign relations in the twentieth century is the story of our national failure to balance the commitments which were made in the nineteenth century. Because of that failure, we have been compelled to fight two great unexpected wars for which we were unprepared.

The Gallup Poll

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 10.—The army of persons engaged in the Treasury Department's present war bond drive can ask Americans to dig down into their pockets without fear of asking for too great a sacrifice. Seven out of every 10 don't think they have yet been called upon to make real sacrifices for the war.

Moreover, for every voter who thinks the Government has gone too far in asking people to make sacrifices, there are at least five who say the Government has not gone far enough in that respect.

This attitude points to one of the fundamental and curious differences between what Washington is trying to do and what the people think ought to be done. Governmental leaders have since Pearl Harbor tried whenever possible to rely on volunteer programs in the war effort. The people, on the other hand, seem to want to be commanded. Note, for example, the following survey results based on personal interviews with representative men and women from coast to coast:

"In general, do you think the Government has gone too far or not far enough in asking people to make sacrifices for the war?"

The vote is:

Too far	8%
Not far enough	44
About right	40
Undecided	8

Each persons was then asked a second question as follows:

"Have you had to make any real sacrifices?"

The vote:

Yes	31%
No	69

There is a significant difference in attitude on that question by income levels.

The group most convinced that the Government has not gone far enough in demanding sacrifices is the upper income group.

By contrast, the lower income group is the least convinced that the Government should go any farther in demanding sacrifices.

	Upper	Middle	Lower
Too far	7%	7%	8%
Not far enough	55	48	39
About right	30	40	44

Palestine Could Admit Jews Now, Wagner Reports

Columbus, Ohio, Sept. 10 (AP).—Thousands of Jews could migrate to the Jewish national homeland in Palestine now, and millions more could go there after the war "with the sympathetic help of the United Nations," Senator Robert F. Wagner of New York, asserted today.

"This help should be forthcoming more swiftly now that the Mediterranean is a United Nations' lake," Wagner said in a message to the Zionist organization of America which will open its forty-sixth annual three-day convention here tomorrow.

Wagner is co-chairman with Senator Charles L. McNary of Oregon of the American Palestine Committee, a Christian organization.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., also praised Palestine's contribution to the war effort and the work done in its reconstruction in a message to the convention. . . .

Peace Parley Will Be Held Here Thursday

By Robert Tate Allan
Post Church Editor

One of the most significant religious assemblies of the fall and winter season will be held here Thursday, September 16, when Disciples of Christ churches of this area sponsor a conference on a just and durable peace.

DOUGLASS

The parley, following the recent important regional conference on a just and durable peace at Hood College, Frederick, Md., will take place at National City Christian Church, Thomas Circle. Sponsors will be the District Missionary Society and the Christian Church Council.

Mrs. Bertram Pickard, lecturer from the American Friends Society, Philadelphia, Pa., will speak at 1:15 p. m. on "Looking Toward the Post-war World." The following discussion groups will meet at 3 p. m.:

"The Political Bases of a Just and Durable Peace," Dr. Raymond P. Hawes, professor of philosophy, Goucher College, Baltimore; "The Economic Bases of a Just and Durable Peace," Dr. Clyde Marquis, member of the President's Food Conference that met at White Sulphur Springs; "The Social Bases of a Just and Durable Peace," the Rev. Francis W. McPeek, director, Federation of Churches' social welfare department, and "The Religious Bases of a Just and Durable Peace," Dr. S. Paul Schilling, pastor, Brookland Methodist Church. Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, Federation of Churches' executive secretary, will speak at 5 p. m. on "What Ban Be Done in the Local Congregation."

Discussions groups for men, women and young people are set for 7:30 p. m. Dr. Paul F. Douglass, president of American University, will address a mass meeting at 8:30 p. m. in the National City Church on "Responsible Citizenship in the World Community."

Young People Will Hear Council Representative

Miss Norma E. Arneson, a representative of the National Lutheran Council working among war workers living in Washington, will be the guest speaker at the Young People's Hour tomorrow at 7 p. m., at Reformation Lutheran Church.

Baltimore Woman to Talk on Baha'i

Mrs. H. M. Langrall of Baltimore, Md., will speak at the Baha'i Hall, 1308 I st. nw. tomorrow at 8:15 p. m., on "Let Us Not Be Afraid." Mrs. Langrall has been actively engaged in Baha'i teaching and lecturing for some time. She formerly lived in Washington and her many friends here will enjoy seeing her again. Miss Lydia Martin will act as chairman of this meeting.

In discussing her subject, Mrs. Langrall, quoting from Baha'i teachings, said: "Grief and sorrow do not come to us by chance; they are sent by the Divine Mercy for our perfecting. When grief and sorrow come, then will a man remember his Father who is in Heaven, who is able to deliver him from his humiliations. The more a man is chastened, the greater is the harvest of spiritual virtues shown forth by him."

The class to study "The Chosen Highway" will be conducted by Miss Leona Barnitz at 11 a. m.

D. C. Clergy Return From Vacations

Prominent clergymen will be back in their pulpits tomorrow after vacations spent in various parts of the country.

HARRIS

They will include Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, Foundry Methodist Church and chaplain of the United States Senate; the Rev. Edward O. Clark, Chevy Chase Baptist; the Rev. George Schnable, Albright Memorial Evangelical; Dr. Fred S. Buschmeyer, Mount Pleasant Congregational Church; Dr. Andrew Reid Bird, Presbyterian Church of the Pilgrims; Dr. Chrales W. Sheerin, Epiphany Episcopal Church, and Dr. Harry W. Burgan, Hamline Methodist Church.

The Rev. Mr. Clark spent part of his vacation as a volunteer in the Farm Crop Corps at Timberville. Doctor Harris and family have been sojounrning at Cape May and Ocean Grove, N. J. The Rev. Mr. Schnabel and family also were at Ocean Grove.

(See sermon column for returning pastors' sermon themes.)

Christian Science Theme 'Substance'

The Christian Science lesson-sermon for tomorrow is "Substance." Services will be held in all churches and societies at 11 a. m. and repeated at 8 p. m., except Third Church, at 5 p. m. All are invited to attend the services and the Wednesday evening meeting at 8 o'clock.

Among the citations comprising the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." (Psalms 33:6.)

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "It is a false supposition, the notion that there is real substance matter, the opposite of spirit." (Page 278.)

Education Week Indorsed By President

Chicago, Sept. 10.—President Roosevelt has indorsed a Nation-wide community observance of the thirteenth annual Religious Education Week, September 26 to October 3, in a letter from the White House addressed to Dr. Roy G. Ross, general secretary of the International Council of Religious Education, sponsor of the observance, it was announced today by Dr. Ross.

"I hope there will be a quickening of the spirit of religion as a result of Religious Education Week," states the President's letter concerning the observance in which more than 90 per cent of American Protestantism will participate.

"We have already proven that we are the arsenal of democracy," President Roosevelt declares in the letter. "But this accomplishment, great as it is, will not suffice to gain us that just and durable peace for which we strive unless we prove also that we are an arsenal of spiritual values.

"Unless we have faith in freedom, in brotherhood and in the rational direction of life, a faith undismayed by all obstacles, our labor and our sacrifices in the present struggle must assuredly be in vain. In the days of trial which still separate us from victory, in the years of momentous decision which will fix the duration and character of the peace, we must avail ourselves to the full of our spiritual heritage," the President's letter concludes.

Through the theme of "Community Foundations," Religious Education Week will seek to emphasize the importance of Christians in leading a divided and war-torn world into a world community through cooperation of local churches in community building, Dr. Ross stated.

Miss Blackburn Takes New Post

Miss Ruth Blackburn, well-known member of Luther Place Memorial Church, Thomas Circle, has assumed her new duties as office secretary of the church.

She was formerly connected with the office of Dr. Gould Wickey, of the United Lutheran Church's board of education, and is an officer of the Luther League of America. Miss Hazel Anderson is now devoting full time to her duties as church parish worker.

The Truth About Washington

By Wilbur J. LaRoe, Jr.

The Capital City of our Nation has had more than its share of criticism in recent weeks. In a public address a bishop of nation-wide reputation stated, "Drink and drunkenness in Washington are fearful . . . Crime and vice run high."

The minister of a prominent Washington church described the Nation's Capital as "the wettest and lousiest city in the United States." These are extreme statements and need qualification.

On the whole Washington, in its moral aspect, compares at least favorably with other cities of the United States. A community can usually be pretty well judged by the quality of its officials and by the efficiency of its law enforcement agencies and its educational system.

Our city is run by three honest and public-spirited Commissioners appointed by the President. Often have I thanked God that we do not have the cheap and dirty local politics prevalent in so many cities. We have a splendid court system and a good police system.

Our public schools are of very high quality, functioning under a Board of Education selected by our Federal judges, and the pay of our teachers ranks near the Nation's top. In addition we have four universities: George Washington, Catholic, American, and Georgetown. Washington is one of the great seats of learning in this country.

Especially worthy of note is the extent of public interest in community affairs. We have no vote—shame on our democracy that it tolerates such a condition—but we have nearly 60 active citizens' associations somewhat akin to the old New England "town meetings."

I know of no city where there is more active or intelligent discussion of community problems. These associations cooperate with the churches in fighting gambling, vice and other community ills.

Among other things they defeated a legislative proposal to bring a race-track with pari-mutuel gambling to Washington. We had some "big-shot" gamblers here a decade ago, but most of them were put behind the bars, and there is probably less commercial gambling in Washington now than in the average city of its size.

The crowded living conditions here are notorious, and much exploited, but Washington has shown the ability of taking this terrific influx of new people "in stride" and to handle its wartime horde reasonably well. It is a matter of considerable significance that in spite of serious overcrowding the number of reported crimes was decidedly less for the fiscal year 1942-1943 than for either of the two preceding years.

Much is said about vice conditions. We have our share of prostitution but there is encouragement in the fact that, due to active interest shown by the churches and others, the police and the courts are cooperating to bring the situation under more effective control.

No longer will offenders with venereal disease be dismissed with a warning or with a light fine, but physical examination will be ordered and the offenders kept in confinement until the disease is non-infectious. Other cities might follow this example.

ChurchCommunity NightsOpen Friday

Friday at 7 o'clock marks the opening of "Community Project Night" at Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, with a special program of hobby groups, games and recreation for the children of the community. Lloyd H. Snyder, jr., with a large corps of workers, will have charge of this program during the winter months.

Open house for warworkers, servicemen and women is being held on Saturdays from 8:30 to 11:30 p. m. in the social hall.

AU Schedules 28 Ministers To Lead Chapel

Charting the year ahead in terms of religious devotion and spiritual inspiration for students at the American University is the announcement made yesterday that 28 ministers who will conduct weekly chapel services in beautiful Metropolitan Memorial Church at Nebraska and New Mexico aves.

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes will officiate at the opening convocation on Wednesday, September 22, at 11:15 a. m., the day prior to the assembling of the first regular classes at the university. During subsequent weeks of the school year chapel services for the students will be conducted each Thursday at 11:15 a. m.

The college chaplain is Dean A. B. Potorf, whose appointment to that office was recently announced by President Paul F. Douglas. Dean Potorf will be available for student counselling during regular hours each week.

"Religion is recognized at the university as a division of the curriculum," said Dr. Douglass. "We believe that education must have ethical objectives, and that participation in the religious life of the campus and the community is necessary for students who are preparing to take their place in a responsible free world."

Youth Will Hear Rabbi

Rabbi Solomon H. Metz, spiritual leader of Adas Israel Congregation, will address the young people of high school age tomorrow at 7 p. m. at Foundry Methodist Church on "The Place of Prayer in Religion."

25th Year of His Ordination Will Be Marked by Dr. Coady

The Rev. Dr. John J. Coady, pastor of St. Anthony's Catholic Church, Brookland, will celebrate the silver jubilee of his ordination to the priesthood tomorrow.

A solemn high mass will be offered by the jubiliarian at St. Anthony's at 12 noon. The sermon will be delivered by the Very Rev. Henri Wiesel, S. J., rector of St. Aloysius Church.

In the evening at 8 o'clock there will be a social gathering in the parish hall at which the parishioners of St. Anthony's will extend their congratulations to Dr. Coady. The speaker on this occasion will be the Very Rev. William E. Welsh, S. J., headmaster of the Georgetown Preparatory School. Entertainment will be supplied by George O'Connor and his Minstrels, Miss Mary Claveloux and Miss Frances Mohan. The Hon. Leo A. Rover will preside and introduce the participants in the program.

Dr. Coady is Well Known

The jubilee celebration is being planned by a parish committee of which the Rev. Dr. Edward J. O'Brien is chairman and the Revs. John L. Bailey and John J. Dressel are vice chairmen.

Dr. Coady is one of the best known Catholic clergymen in the District. He was ordained by Bishop Corrigan on September 8, 1918, in the chapel of St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, Md. He served as a professor at St. Charles College, Catonsville, Md., from 1918 to 1920. He attended the Collegio Internationale Angelico, at Rome from 1920 to 1922, where he was awarded the doctorate in sacred theology and Roman law.

Returning to the United States in 1922 he was appointed to St. Matthew's Church as assistant pastor. He remained in that post until 1936 when he was appointed pastor of St. Mary's Church, Rockville, Md. Dr. Coady came to St. Anthony's in 1941 as pastor.

In addition to his parochial work, Dr. Coady was professor of canon law at Mount St. Mary's Seminary, Emmitsburg, Md., from 1931 to 1942.

The school children of St. Anthony's will hold their own celebration for the jubilarian on Wednesday with a program under the direction of the Sister of St. Benedict who conduct both a grammar and high school in the parish.

Dr. Ball Begins 41st Year at Metropolitan

Dr. John Compton Ball has returned from his mountain home on Lake Mohonk, N. Y., and tomorrow begins his forty-first year as pastor of Metropolitan Baptist Church.

BALL

After graduation from Crozer Seminary in 1899 he spent four years with the Baptist Church of New Bethlehem, Pa., and in June, 1903, was called to Metropolitan. He began his work here in September of that year with a church of 361 members. The membership is now 3200. The income in 1903 was $5500 and it is now over $50,000 per year. The building was razed in 1911 and a new structure erected, the congregation worshipping meanwhile in a tent on a lot where the Arundle Apartment building now stands. The growth of the membership was so rapid that in 1928 an additional building was added, the coal yard of Hummer & Co. being purchased for the purpose.

The church building now occupies the entire block from 6th to 5th st., with the exception of one small store at 5th and A sts. Recently the trustees purchased the adjoining frame building on 6th st. south of the church as the large congregations are making it necessary to increase the size of the auditorium. Dr. Ball has received nearly 5000 into the church during his pastorate. His anniversary sermon will be on the theme "Jesus Only."

Dr. Ball will administer the ordinance of the Lord's Supper at the morning service and will receive 22 members into the church. There will be special musical numbers for both services.

The assistant pastor, the Rev. John M. Ballbach, will preach in the evening on the theme "Resisting the Irresistable." Following the evening service the young people will broadcast over Station WWDC from the church auditorium.

Mortgage Is Liquidated

A mortgage burning ceremony will be held at Takoma Park Lutheran Church, 7th and Dahlia sts. nw., tomorrow at 11 a. m. The Rev. J. Adrian Pfeiffer will conduct the services.

Stars, Stripes

Cathedral's Flag Is From New Zealand

A new United States flag will fly over Washington Cathedral. It was presented to the cathedral by the Rev. D. C. Bates from Auckland, New Zealand.

From September 13 through September 24, tryouts for the boys' choir will be held. Parents are urged to telephone Mr. Ellis Varley, choir director, WO. 3500, to make appointments. The junior choir sings at two afternoon services each week and at 9:30 a. m. Communion service on Sundays.

The Rev. Edward Gabler, rector of Christ Episcopal Church in Washington, will be the preacher at the evensong service tomorrow at 4 p. m. He is a member of the standing committee of the Washington Diocese and many other prominent committees and departments of the work of the Episcopal Church in the city.

The Rev. Dr. Theodore O. Wedel, canon missioner of the cathedral, will be the preacher at the service of morning prayer at 11 a. m. He will take for his subject, "George Herbert, Poet-Clergyman-Saint of the Seventeenth Century." This is another in the special series that Canon Wedel has been preaching on "Famous Men of the Church." The State flag of Iowa will be carried in procession and special prayers will be said for the State and its Governor. Holy Communion will be at 7:30 and 9:30 a. m. in Bethlehem Chapel.

'Bonds for Victory' Is Revival Theme

Elder Michaux's revival service tomorrow at 8 p. m. at Griffith Stadium will have "Buy Bonds for Victory" accent, with men and women in uniform and the Army Band taking part.

Elder Michaux will speak on "What We Must Do to Win This War." Other speakers will be Maj. R. R. Wright, president of the Citizens' Southern Bank & Trust Co., who has sold one million dollars worth of war bonds to Negroes, and Harry J. Yaeger, evangelist, who has been distributing Bibles among servicemen. The elder's famous Cross Choir will sing.

Atlanta Cleric Assumes Post In Federation

The Rev. Philip Widenhouse of Atlanta, Ga., assumed his new position this past week as director of the Department of Research and Church Planning of the Washington Federation of Churches. He succeeds the Rev. Albert Rasmussen, who accepted a call as field director of the Congregational Churches in Chicago.

Dr. Horace Cromer is chairman of the Department of Research and Church Planning. Representatives of the various denominations make up the personnel of the department.

The Rev. Mr. Widenhouse comes well qualified to continue the pioneering work begun by the Rev. Mr. Rasmussen. New housing areas will be surveyed as to their relative needs. According to Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the federation, this department not only aids the various denominations in meeting the religious needs of the new areas, but also prevents establishment of too many churches of such areas and thereby serves the church at large unnecessary outlays in money and manpower.

The Washington Federation is the only federation which has a full time staff directing this work.

First Meeting Of Tuxis Club Will Be Tomorrow

The Tuxis Club of the First Congregational Church will have the first meeting of the new season tomorrow night at 6 o'clock in the chapel. All young people of high school and college age are cordially invited.

The Scrooby Club will meet at the church tomorrow night.

Wednesday the "game night" for servicemen and women and war-workers will begin at 7:30 p. m.

The first church night dinner will be held Thursday at 6 p. m., Dr. Anderson will speak on "What Should the Church Do Now?"

Square dancing will be held Friday at 8:30 p. m. followed by social dancing at 10:30 p. m. Refreshments will be served.

Mission Crusade Opens Tomorrow At Tabernacle

TURNBULL

They will be James E. Bennett, noted lawyer, New York City, who will speak at 11 a.m. on "God's Purpose for Man;" Dr. John R. Turnbull, missionary and world traveler, at 3 p. m., on "From Human Sacrifice to Christ," and Mr. Bennett at 8 p. m. on "The Bible Defeats Atheism." Another speaker will be Robert B. Turnbull, missionary to Haiti. The evening message will tell the story of the famous Harry Rimmer trial to prove the authenticity of the Bible.

Technicolor films will be shown each week night at 8 o'clock, depicting scenes of places now in the news, such as New Guinea, Borneo and the Philippines.

Last YMCA Park Service Tomorrow

The Organized Bible Class Association will be in charge of the closing YMCA open air service in Lincoln Park tomorrow at 4 p. m. Edward H. DeGroot, jr., president, Central Union Mission, will speak, and officers of the association will participate in the program. Page McK. Etchison, president, will preside; William R. Schmucker, treasurer, will lead the song service, and Mrs. Margaret Moffat will play the organ.

Baptist School Opens Monday

The annual city-wide training school for the study of Baptist Training Union materials will open Monday at 7:45 p. m. at Metropolitan Baptist Church, 6th and A sts. ne., it has been announced by Dr. Gaye L. McGlothlen, secretary of Christian education of the District of Columbia Baptist Convention.

The faculty will be headed by J. E. Lambdin, editor and secretary in charge of Baptist Training Union work for the Southern Baptist Convention. Additional leaders from Nashville include Henry C. Rogers, C. Aubrey Hearn, Mrs. J. E. Lambdin, Miss Margaret Griffin and Miss Thelma Arnote.

Each of these head a special division in the Training Union work of the Southern Convention. Versil Crenshaw of Richmond, assistant Training Union director of Virginia, will also be present. Additional classes will be taught by Mrs. Gus Johnson, formerly Training Union worker in Florida and now residing in Washington, and the Rev. W. B. King, pastor of the Fountain Memorial Baptist Church, Washington.

Final Vespers Will Be Tomorrow

The closing vesper service for this season will be held on the lawn of the Community Building, 8 Columbia ave., tomorrow at 7 p. m.

Maj. Kirk T. Mosley, AUS, will be the guest speaker. The music will be under the direction of Louis Macklin, with a special vocal trio, Mrs. Rudy Bata, Gladys Dunn, and Dorothy Ellis.

J. Frank Sidell, chairman of vesper committee will preside, with the evening prayer lead by Howard M. Stackhouse.

Last Community Hymn Sing Will Be Tomorrow

The concluding community hymn sing sponsored by the Federation of Churches' Defense Commission will be held tomorrow at 7:15 p. m. (note change in time) at the Sylvan Theater, Washington Monument Grounds. An octette of men and women in uniform from Fort Belvoir will sing.

"So worship God that if the RECOMPENSE OF YOUR WORSHIP WERE TO be the FIRE, NO ALTERATION OF YOUR WORSHIP OF HIM WOULD BE PRODUCED. If you WORSHIP GOD FROM FEAR, that is UNWORTHY of the THRESHOLD OF THE HOLINESS OF GOD . . . So also, if your GAZE IS ON PARADISE, and if you worship in hope of that; for then you have made God's creation a partner with Him."

NAZARENE NAZARENE

FOUR GREAT DAYS!
MISSIONARY CONVENTION
The Speaker: REV. GEOFFREY W. ROYALL of China
Rev. Mr. Royall has spent nine years as a missionary in China. Four on the famous historical Burma Road, and the last five in Japanese occupied China, where he was Secretary of the Church of the Nazarene. The church which he served was destroyed at the outbreak of the war by a direct hit from a 500-pound bomb. Rev. Royall is author of "Enemies of the Middle Kingdom" and "Thinking Yellow." He is one of the few Occidentals to compose Chinese poetry and pen Chinese scrolls. He displays an interesting assortment of Chinese curios. At the outbreak of the Chinese 'incident" he was mistaken for a spy.
Since returning to America, Rev. Royall has delivered 1100 addresses from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Arizona to Ontario, in churches, colleges, high schools, clubs and over many radio stations.

"IN HEAVENLY LOVE ABIDING"
ANNA L. WARING

In heavenly love abiding
No change my heart shall fear;
And safe is such confiding,
For nothing changes here.
The storm may roar without me,
My heart may low be laid;
But God is round about me,
And can I be dismayed?
Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
This hymn—expressing confident hope and unfaltering trust—appeared in a small book of nineteen hymns entitled "Safety in God." Following so closely the spirit of the twenty-third psalm, it might well be a version of that ancient song of David.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Philadelphia, Sept. 10.—When Bob McChesney quit the Redskins the other day because "at my age it isn't so easy to take the knocks," other veterans of professional football understood. It's a hard game and there's no substitute for youth, they'll tell you.

POVICH

Ed Justice, a teammate of McChesney's on five of the Redskin teams, once enlightened this department on the rigors of pro-football. "You've got to love this game to keep playing it even as long as I have," said Justice. "The knocks come harder every season. Every time I got hurt, I wondered why I should keep playing the fool game, but I always wanted back in there."

When Justice came up to the Redskins out of college, it was great stuff, he related. "You'd play a ball game on Sunday and come out for practice on Monday feeling great. In my second season, I was still feeling the aches on Monday and wasn't ready for practice again until Tuesday. In my third year, it was Wednesday before I recovered from Sunday's game. The next season, I wasn't feeling up to hard work until Thursday. You don't shake those bumps off so easily as you did when you were a kid in college."

McChesney can look back on seven pretty good seasons with the Redskins despite the fact he was never named to an All-Star team at one of the end positions. Coach Ray Flaherty turned down several offers of trades that would send McChesney to other clubs, but he never would let the sandy-haired end get away from him. He was insurance that the Redskins would always have a good end available.

The tough luck of McChesney in his youthful years with the Redskins was that he operated in the shadow of two of the outstanding pro league ends of all time, Wayne Milner and Charlie Malone. That pair shaded him a bit. On most any other team in the league, McChesney would have been a consistent regular. Sammy Baugh once paid him a glowing tribute when he said, "the best asset a forward passer can have is an end like Bob McChesney."

Malone beat McChesney to the idea of quitting pro football by two seasons, and for the same reason: The bumps were getting too hard. The 6-foot-6-inch Malone, constantly a target for the Redskins' opposition when the ball was snapped to Baugh, took a beating in every game. The same height which enabled him to catch passes, was a liability when he was hit. He found it difficult to protect himself like the shorter, chunkier athletes.

Bill Duncan used to write baseball in Philadelphia, and today he rears up to inquire of this department by letter "why there is such a surprising absence of outstanding pitchers this year. With only a few weeks to go it looks as if Spud Chandler of the Yankees will be the only pitcher to win 20 games. Dizzy Trout has a chance but likely will not make it."

Duncan draws in the shades of long ago when, as he says, "Walter Johnson, Joe Wood, Ed Walsh, Eddie Plank, Chief Bender, Jack Coombs and Doc White would pass the 20 mark and some of them 30. I haven't time to look up the records, nor have you, but I'll wager it has been many a year since only one American League pitcher reached 20 victories, if that be the case this season.

"Most fans thought this would be a big year for the pitchers with Joe DiMaggio, Ted Williams and so many other good hitters in uniform. Pitchers like Tiny Bonham, Dutch Leonard, Tex Hughson, Johnny Niggeling, Hal Newhouser and Roger Wolff, and others, figured to have good chances to reach 20, but none did. Bonham puzzles me more than any of them. He looked like a great pitcher the day he came up from Kansas City, but he can't work often. Strange for a big fellow.

"As Walter Johnson sat on his farm this summer waiting for the rains that came too late, maybe he contemplated coming back in 1944 and showing the boys, even at this stage, how easy it is to win 20," reflects Duncan.

We're not sure of the answer as to why there is such a scarcity of 20-game winners. Certainly the good pitchers in the league figured to do even better this year with the armed services removing a grist of the better hitters. But in the same manner, the pitchers also suffered, no doubt. The services took fine defensive players away from the majors, too, and the pitchers are operating with minor league support in many cases.

When such as Johnson and Plank and Coombs and Grove were winning 20 games a season with great regularity, they worked oftener, however. Three days' rest was usually their limit. In these times, the style is to give the pitchers at least three days rest. Tommy Bridges, for instance, works only once a week. Dutch Leonard never works with less than four days rest. Johnny Niggeling is a once-a-week pitcher, and Buck Newsom is reaching that stage.

Managers in the American League are carrying bigger pitching staffs and on account of the numerous doubleheaders the old timers didn't have to contend with, and are distributing their pitching jobs. They're also saving pitchers for spots. Only the outstanding guy like Chandler works twice every seven or eight days.

Bear Market Not Bearish

Don't Underestimate Bears For Redskin Exhibition Tilt

By Merrell W. Whittlesey
Post Staff Writer

The pro football fans who were worrying that the poor old Chicago Bears would never be what they used to be had better take a glance at the Bears' starting lineup for the Redskin exhibition game in Baltimore tomorrow and they'll sing a different song.

The Bears have made exactly four changes, count 'em, the same number as the Redskins, in the lineup which lost the championship playoff game here last year, 14 to 6. They haven't done badly in newcomers, either, with such as Bob Steuber, the back who made Big Six Champion Missouri's "T" click, Dante Magnani, pride of the Cleveland Rams, and the someback trio of Walt Masters, many years out of Penn, Bronko Nagurski, who is due to report any day, and Bob Snyder, who only kicked five-out-of-five points-after-touchdown against the Giants last week.

Tackle, Halfback Missing

Only Tackles Ed Kolman and Lee Artoe, Guard Ray Bray and Halfback Hugh Gallarneau of the '42 starting team will be missing tomorrow. Of course there are others, such as Ray Nolting, Joe Mazaicki, Joe Stydahar and Charley O'Rourke, but man-for-man the Bear losses have not meant any more to the team than the Redskins now in the services.

Strangely enough, the Bears, like the Redskins, lost heaviest at tackle. Where the 'Skins must do without Bill Young, Ed Beinor and Fred Davis, the Bears must replace, if possible, Kolman, Artoe and Stydahar. Only Al Hoptowit is left of the Bears' tackle quartet, and the 257-pound George Musso, an 11-year man in the pro league, has transferred from guard to tackle for the occasion.

Giants' Game Proves Point

The gentlemen who proposed the merger of the Bears and Chicago Cardinals were wisely turned down. The Bears can take care of themselves, as evidenced by that 42-28 beating they handed the New York Giants last week and if the Cardinals have anything at all it would have made a super team.

Of the starting backfield of last year only Hugh Gallarneau will be missing for the Bears. They still have Side Luckman and Gary Famiglietti, merely a pair of all-league backs, and Harry Clark. Gallarneau's replacement will be Bill Geyer and if the Bear coaching trio should decide upon a change they can run in Bullet Bill Osmanski, Speedster Ray McLean and some budding rookies headed by Steuber. The Redskins can tell you a few things about Steuber from the College All-Star game.

Only G. W.'s Bob Nowaskey is missing from the crop of ends which helped the Bears to the rating of the greatest football outfit of all time before the Redskins hit them last winter. George Wilson, Connie Beery, Johnny Siegel and Hampton Pool are back. Too bad about the Bears at center. They lost the third-stringer. The only ones back are Bulldog Turner and Al Matuza, a pretty fair 1-2 combination as centers go.

At guards Dr. Danny Fortmann can take care of himself and has always managed to take care of a few others in addition. Against the Giants Monte Merkel of Kansas drew the other starting guard role and is slated to open against the Redskins.

Doug McNulty, another Bear "sleeper" from Wichita hit the touchdown column in the Bears' opener last week. He's a pretty fair kicker, too, they say.

The Bears have the greatest running outfit in the game, Luckman to pass and he's never been far behind Baugh and Isbell. They have excellent pass receivers in McLean and a fine set of ends and have strength in punting and Snyder again in his place kicking specialty department. The line is big and rough and tough and Coaches Hunk Anderson and Luke Johnsos can probably worry along with that tackle trouble.

They look like the team to beat. The Redskins will find out tomorrow for fun and November 21 here for business, and possibly later.

McChesney's Loss Is Blow To Redskins

Vic Carroll May Be Shifted to End; 'Had Enough,' Says Former Coast Star

Bob McChesney, veteran Redskins' end, has announced his retirement from professional football.

His loss is a hard one for Coach Dutch Bergman to take. McChesney and Bob Masterson were to be his regular ends. His other ends are the experienced Joe Aguire and the untried Jack Smith and Ray Reutt.

Bergman may shift Vic Carroll, veteran lineman, to end position.

The 31-year-old gridman, who played his college football at the University of California, Los Angeles, said last night that he had "had enough" of pro football and just wanted to get out before the regular season began. McChesney's action was surprising. He was working with the Redskins at College Park in mid-week and his two appearances in action this season had shown him in excellent form. He turned in a good performance against the College All-Stars and was brilliant in his play last Sunday against the Packers.

McChesney came to Washington when the Skins transferred from Boston. His home is in nearby Virginia and he has business interests to which he will devote his time.

A spokesman for the Redskins said that McChesney had come out of last Sunday's game with bruises as well as sore feet. He had been working out sans shoes this week.

McChesney "retired" once before. He became disgruntled when Coach Ray Flaherty failed to use him in the championship game against the Chicago Bears last season.

Softball Wins To Grill Clubs

The Grillmen—Garvin's and Kavakos'—put their respective opponents, the Alexandria Eagles and the Engineering and Research, on the spit and did them up brown at the Softball Stadium last night in two games of the Invitational Softball tournament.

The District champion Garvin's team had little trouble with the Alexandria boys, winning 9-3; while Kavakos had an even easier row to hoe, with a 12-2 victory.

In tonight's games Briggs Clarificers will meet Mount Rainier Recreation Center and Engineering and Research plays the Alexandria Eagles.

Musial's Double In Seventh Inning Provides Both Red Bird Scores

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept. 10.—The World Champion St. Louis Cardinals took a step nearer their second straight National League Pennant today by defeating the Chicago Cubs, 2 to 1, Stan Musial's double with two Red Birds on base providing both of the St. Louis runs in the seventh inning.

Southpaw Max Lanier won the Cardinals' eighty-ninth game and his own twelfth victory by holding the Cubs to eight hits, three of which came in the ninth inning when the Chicagoans scored their only run. The loss was the Cubs' sixth straight.

The Cardinals made nine hits off Claude Passeau, who suffered his tenth defeat, and bunched three of them in the seventh to win. With two out in that frame, Lou Klein doubled to left and Debs Garms singled off Passeau's leg. Then Musial drove a two-bagger to left field scoring Klein and Garms.

With two out in the ninth Stan Hack, Eddie Stanky and Phil Cavarretta singled for the Cubs' lone run, but Lanier forced Bill Nicholson to fly out to end the game.

Reds and Pirates Split Double Bill

Cincinnati, Sept. 10 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds and the Pittsburgh Pirates split a twilight-night doubleheader this evening, the Pirates taking the opener, 9 to 6, and the Reds winning the nightcap, 1 to 0. Bert Haas tripled in the fourth inning and scored on a long fly for the only country of the game.

Triumph in the second game gave Bucky Walters his fourteenth victory of the season although he was outpitched by big Max Butcher, who was on the mound for the Pirates.

They are counted on to carry a big share of the offensive burden for the Camp Grant Warriors in the game with Illinois. Clatt is fullback, Huber an end.

Roger Wolff Weakens in Mound Duel

Both Clubs Hitless To Fifth; Johnson, Early Prominent; Wynn Wins 16th

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Philadelphia Sept. 10.—The Nats, the bullies, tonight slapped down their favorite playmates, the Athletics for the fourteenth time this season with a 5-0 victory that was the handiwork, chiefly of young Early Wynn.

Wynn flung a three-hit shut-out at the Athletics and the 5100 customers in Shibe Park for his sixteenth win of the year, a very neat sort of job in which he didn't give up a hit until the sixth inning and saved his shut-out in the eighth when the A's had men on third and first with none out.

For all of that, it was a struggle for Wynn despite his clever performance, because knuckle-balling Roger Wolff of the A's was a shut-out pitcher himself until the seventh inning. In fact, the game didn't produce any kind of a hit until Sherry Robertson beat out a bunt in the fifth.

Close to Indians

Incidentally, it was a very cozy victory for the Nats, enabling them to stay within a half-game of the second-place Cleveland Indians who earlier in the day had won a doubleheader from the Tigers.

Jake Early was no drawback to Wynn and the Nats, driving in two runs with his pair of hits, but it was Bob Johnson who set in motion the big run of the evening, the first one, at a time when Wynn and Wolff were locked in a 0-0 struggle.

In the same park where for ten years he had played the outfield for the A's, big Johnson was at first base for the Nats tonight and he put the winning run on base by beating out a bunt down the third base line with none out in the seventh.

Early moved Johnson to third with a single to right after one was out, and after Priddy walked to fill the bases, Johnson scored on Sullivan's grounder to Suder which forced Priddy at second.

Climb on Wolff

In the eighth, though, the Nats climbed on Wolff for four big, game-clinching runs. He walked Spence with one out, and the panic was on, Moore singling to right, and Johnson beat out a hit down the first base line to score the first run home. Robertson drew a walk that filled the bases and Early fetched two more runs home with a single to right. Priddy made it four runs for the inning with a double to left that scored Robertson. When Early tried to make it all the way home from first on the blow, he was out at the plate.

Wynn was something to see in the first five innings. He faced only three men per inning and got 'em all out, with only two balls hit beyond the infield. His fast ball was crackling into Early's mitt. He retired the first 16 men in order before Suder singled to right with one out in the sixth for the A's first hit of the game.

Macks Threaten

Wynn's bid for a shutout was seemingly going poof when Wagner opened the eighth with a double to right and Suder followed with a single to left. But Wagner stopped at third on the play and never did score. Sherry Robertson grabbed up pinch hitter Welaj's grounder and preserved Wynn's shutout by nipping Wagner at the plate. On Mayo's grounder into the box, Wynn threw to second for a force play and the second out. He filled the bases by walking White and his shutout seemed gone again when Ripple worked him to a 3-0 count, but he got two strikes over the plate and got rid of Ripple on a pop to Priddy.

Indians Clamp Tighter Grip On Second Place By Twin Victory

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Sept. 10.—The Cleveland Indians clamped a tight grip on the American League's second place today by defeating the Detroit Tigers in both ends of a double-header, 4 to 2 and 1 to 0. Rookie Hank Edwards' homer with two out in the ninth won the nightcap.

Edwards' blow came off Rufus Gentry, rookie right-hander from Buffalo of the International League making his major league debut, and it gave Jim Bagby his fifteenth victory. Bagby pitched a seven-hitter and permitted only two Tigers to reach second base. Gentry yielded six hits.

In the opener the Indians scored four runs off Lefty Hal Newhouser to give the veteran Mel Harder his seventh victory of the season and his 196th in the American League. Harder had a three-hitter going into the eighth when a single and two triples produced two runs. Joe Heving came in to fan three of the last four batters.

Heavies Added For Monday

Another heavyweight bout was added to Monday night's boxing cavalcade at Griffith Stadium, with Willie Thomas, the husky Philadelphian, and George Brothers, erstwhile New York Golden Gloves titleholder, furnishing the attraction over the eight-round route.

This bout, tossed in by Promoter Joe Turner for extra measure, is expected to add considerable interest to the show which finds Claudio Villar, the former Spanish heavyweight champion, meeting Larry Lane, the Trenton Thumper, in one 10-round co-feature, and Eddie Kane, the local welterweight, and Nick Latsios, Alexandria's Golden Greek, clashing in the other 10.

Thomas once before was booked to fight Wally Cross, of Newark, at the Arena, but the match was called off just beefore ring time when the Boxing Commission ruled out Cross because of a heart murmer.

Unusual College Grid Season Opens Today With 5 Games

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 10.—The 1943 college football season, reduced by the war to a bare semblance of the sport that once was known as the fall madness, gets away to a staggered start tomorrow with three games in the East, one in the Mid-West and another in the South.

With approximately 300 of the Nation's 600-odd colleges dropping the gridiron sport because of lack of manpower, small school: blossoming out with powerhouses, stars of last year opposing their alma maters, professionals playing amateurs, and intersectional games restricted by transportation problems, the season figures to be the most unusual since Rutgers and Princeton played the first game in 1869.

The great party of the casualties has been among the smaller schools, but many gridiron greats of the past also have been forced to drop by the wayside—most of them because the Army forbade its trainees to take part in intercollegiate competition.

The Southeastern Conference, home with only four teams—Georgia, Georgia Tech, Tulane and Louisiana State. Oklahoma A. and M., Tulsa and Drake are lone survivors of the Missouri Valley Conference. Baylor will not operate in the Southwest Conference and Stanford has left the field in the Pacific Coast league. Santa Clara, a West Coast independent, also has discontinued competition.

In the East the list includes Fordham, Syracuse, Duquesne, Georgetown, Manhattan and Harvard, although the last-named will play an informal schedule. Only the Western Conference and the Big Six of the major circuit remain intact. Michigan State and Detroit are the only two major schools in the Midwest forced to cancel their schedules.

Headlining the slim opening day card are Muhlenberg and Yale at New Haven and Illinois and Camp Grant at Champaign. Muhlenberg is one of the smaller schools that has benefitted by the transfer of Navy trainees to its campus and figures to give Yale a battle.

The other games match Rochester, also studded with stars from other schools, and Baldwin-Wallace at Rochester, Swarthmore and Ursinus at Swarthmore and Presbyterian and Fort Jackson 59th Signal Battalion. Sunday, the powerful Great Lakes naval eleven opposes Fort Riley at Great Lakes.

Mrs. Herrman Wins Corby Tourney

Second Start In Class A Captures Cup

Winner of Third Net in Herald Cup Play Upsets Dope; Mrs. Meckley Gross

Mrs. E. E. Herrmann of Army and Navy Club made her second start in a Class A tournament of the District Women's Golf Association a winning one yesterday and won the Corby Cup at Columbia Country Club with a 94-17, 77.

Less than a month ago Mrs. Herrmann reduced her handicap from Class B to Class A and in her first venture in the select group won third net in the Herald Cup play last week.

Scoring in yesterday's tournament hit an unexplainable high as only 27 players of the 54 starters turned in cards and only Mrs. Betty Meckley, who won gross for the fifth time, broke 90.

Mrs. Herrmann was out in 51 but came back in 43, the second lowest back nine of the day. The new Corby Cup winner had only one 6 on her back nine card and won by a margin of 4 shots among the net scores.

Mrs. Meckley paired consistent 42s for an 84 in dominating the gross scores. The next best efforts were 90s by Mrs. L. G. Pray and Mrs. W. H. Wise and a 92 by Jane Nelson, the 15-year-old girl golfer from Kenwood.

Second low net went to Mrs. W. H. Wise, the long hitter from Kenwood, with 90-7, 83, while other net prize winners, in order, were Mrs. J. Y. York, Army and Navy, playing partner of the champion, 100-16, 84; Elinor Finckel, Columbia, 93-9, 84; Mrs. W. B. Severn, Chevy Chase, 94-9, 85; Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, 90-5, 85; Mrs. J. F. Gross, Columbia, 98-12, 86, including a 9 on the par 3 sixteenth; Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely, Washington, 100-14, 86, and Mrs. A. A. Morrill, Kenwood, 102-16, 86. The matching cards method of deciding ties left Mrs. Fritz Williams, Argyle, and Mrs. McNitt, Kenwood, out of the prime list.

Giants Batter Braves for 15, Win, 10 to 2

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 10.—The Giants went on a 15-hit spree today to wallop the Boston Braves, 10 to 2.

The tailenders bunched seven of their bingles to score six runs in a big fifth inning that knocked Al Javery out of the box. Meanwhile Van Mungo and Johnny Allen limited the Braves to four hits. Allen replaced Mungo in the fifth after the Giant starting twirler had issued four bases on balls. Allen gave up only one hit the rest of the way.

Johnny Kerr started the big Giant fifth with a single and ended it by hitting into a double play.

Marshall Cites Early Difficulties

Chief of Staff Says There Are No Short Cuts Along Road to Tokyo, but Range Is Visible

John G. Norris
Post Staff Writer

(Fourth installment of a series of articles on Gen. George C. Marshall's important biennial report as Army Chief of Staff.)

There are no "short-cuts" along the difficult, winding road to Tokyo, although absolute victory over the Japanese is assured. Gen. George C. Marshall, Army Chief of Staff, declares in his report to the Nation.

Rapidly increasing Allied military strength throughout the Pacific now gives us much greater freedom of action than before, he states, but the "predominantly oceanic" character of the war theater to a considerable extent dictates the continuation of the slow but sure method of attack pursued to date.

Reasons for Delay

"Successes thus far in piercing the enemy's protective screen of island citadels prove the soundness of combining surface and submarine attacks on hostile sea routes of communication, strategic employment of our long-range bombers against the enemy's staging and supply bases and coordinated assaults by all elements upon successive objectives," he states.

The story of the war with Japan to date including much "inside" data as to reasons for Allied actions and policies not given out at the time, is contained in General Marsnall's comprehensive report.

Opening paragraphs of the unusual document, unprecedented among war time reports in its frankness—make it plain the American high command fully expected Japan's "menacing preparations" in 1940-1941 to end in war.

Little could be done on our part, however, to prepare to meet the threatened conflict, Marshall discloses.

Lack of Men, Material

"Lack of modern material, especially in airplanes and antiaircraft guns, as well as lack of trained unit embarrassed the War Department during this period both in the preparation of our overseas establishments to meet possible attacks in both oceans," he writes.

"Deficiencies in arms and equipment especially in ammunition and airplanes required for the immediate defense of the Western Hemisphere, the Panama Canal Zone, Alaska and the Regular Army and National Guard with supporting troops, were so serious that adequate reinforcements for the Philippines at this time would have left the United States in a position of great peril should there be a break in the defense of France or Great Britain."

Not until the winter of 1941 could modern planes be sent to Hawaii and it was late summer of that year before reinforcements—small scale reinforcements—were ordered to the Philippines.

Shipments Failed

Modern fighter planes were shipped to Manila, but only by stripping squadrons training in the United States. Thirty-five Flying Fortresses were flown across the Pacific, while 48 others scheduled for delivery to General MacArthur before Pearl Harbor were not sent in time because of a lag in production and adverse winds in the Pacific.

In October 20,000 fully equipped and fairly well trained troops, with a half million tons of weapons and supplies were gathered on the Pacific Coast for shipment to Manila, but all or most of these reinforcements either were at sea or still on the San Francisco docks when war came.

The reinforcements did not reach MacArthur and he faced the Japs with 19,000 American troops, 12,000 Filipino Scouts, about 250 planes and some 100,000 men in the newly mobilized Philippine Army, largely untrained and unequipped.

Story of Tragedy

General Marshall retells the tragic story of Bataan and Corregidor, reciting several previously untold chapters.

The greater part of MacArthur's little air force, he said, was destroyed on the ground by Jap air attacks "due to limited dispersal fields and lack of sufficient radar warning equipment, antiaircraft guns and other materiel."

MacArthur, under the circumstances, was "left no alternative but that of a delaying action," the chief of staff states, and accomplished the feat "under great difficulties."

Supply difficulties on Bataan were greatly intensified by the thousands of civilians inside our lines, but desperate efforts to run in supplies through the enemy blockade proved largely futile. One of the most interesting disclosures of the entire report is Marshall's revelation of these attempts.

Fifth Column Activity

Owners and crews of small vessels approached by our agents to become blockade runners refused United States Government checks, and gold had to be flown to Australia and the Dutch East Indies from America. Only three of seven ships sent from Australia arrived at Cebu, American-held city in the southern Philippines. The others were either captured, sunk or they absconded with the funds and supplies.

Attempts to transship the supplies from Cebu to Bataan failed, with at least 15 ships, totaling 40,000 tons, sunk or captured. Another scheme to run the blockade did not mature in time to aid Corregidor and Bataan. Several of our old destroyers were fitted out as blockade runners, but none reached the Philippines in time.

Subs Carried Supplies

Some supplies were delivered by submarines at intervals during the campaign, however.

Finally, the "gallant defense which has become an epic in American history" reached its inevitable end. Telling of the fall of Bataan and then Corregidor, General Marshall publishes an extract from a letter written by Lieut. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright just before the end, stating:

"We have done our best, both here and on Bataan, and although beaten we are still unashamed."

Elsewhere, the Jap hordes were marching on. These initial Japanese successes, Marshall writes, "were due to Allied lack of military means, especially in aircraft and its supporting warning and maintenance services, to oppose an adversary whose preliminary strategic deployments permitted successive concentrations of overwhelming superiority in land, sea and air forces on selected objectives."

Australia Saved

But the sacrifice of Wainwright and his men was not in vain. Their "desperate resistance," holding up a sizable portion of Japanese strength, Marshall says, bought precious time. Men and supplies were sent to the South and Southwest Pacific. Our supply lines were given adequate protection and Australia was saved.

Lawyers Appoint Committee To Study Montgomery Rule

Three prominent lawyers of suburban Maryland have been invited to serve on the committee which will present to the judges of the Circuit Court objections of affected lawyers to the ban on practice by lawyers who do not maintain offices in the county.

J. Harry Welch, chairman, selected to head the committee at a protest meeting held by 40 lawyers from Montgomery, Prince Georges and Frederick Counties Wednesday night, said he expects to complete selection of the committee by Monday. The committee will point out that the rule adopted by the court in effect prohibits them from any kind of practice in the county.

Coupled to Section

The rule provides that lawyers who file pleadings with the court must maintain offices in the county where they are present "a reasonable time" and secure certificates of compliance from the court.

It is not the rule promulgated by the court itself which has created the storm of protest, Welch explained, although naturally the lawyers who do not maintain offices in the county would not favor it.

It is the coupling of the rule with Section 2 of the Act of the General Assembly, which empowered the judges to establish rules of procedure and membership requirements which has aroused the lawyers, Welch said.

Section 2 provides that "no person shall practice law in Montgomery County until he or she shall have first complied with the rules of practice established by the Circuit Court for Montgomery County and until he or she has procured a license for the same whenever so required."

This provision automatically prevents the objecting lawyers from any practice of law whatsoever in the county when it is coupled with rule which requires maintenance of an office, Welsh pointed out. His interpretation of the law was concurred in by Judge Albert E. Brault of the Trial Magistrate's Court at Bethesda. Brault, like Welsh, maintains his offices in Washington but has a practice in the county.

Lawyers who are not certified by the court as having complied with the rule may not write wills, confer with clients, search titles or do any kind of legal work at all unless they obtain an associate who complies with the rule, they pointed out. It acts as a complete bar to any sort of legal advice given in the county.

Welch said he expects to have his grievance bearing committee completed by Monday and then will arrange for a conference with the judges of the circuit court in an effort to iron out the alleged discrimination.

Soldier Escapes, Police Guard Home Of Lina Basquette

Los Angeles, Sept. 10 (AP).—Civil authorities guarded the home of Lina Basquette, former screen star, today after the escape from the March Field, Calif., guardhouse of Pvt. George P. Rimke, under sentence of life imprisonment on his court-martial conviction last month of raping her.

After his conviction at the Muroc, Calif., air base, Rimke defiantly shouted, "I'll get you if it's the last thing I do," referring, Army officers said, to Miss Basquette and Capt. George H. Rawlins, assistant judge advocate who prosecuted him.

March Field authorities would not disclose how Rimke escaped.

Employers Influencing Pupils To Hold Jobs, Agency Charges

Employers of school-age boys and girls in summer jobs here are not fully abiding by their agreement with the District public schools to counsel the youthful workers to return to school this semester, it was charged yesterday.

Other manpower sources, such as unemployed women and handicapped persons, are being overlooked while the teen-agers are encouraged to remain on the job at the expense of their schooling, according to Mrs. Mildred S. Percy, head of the Department of Guidance and Placement.

Part Time Work

At the same time there is no need for students to give up entirely the war work they have been employed in this summer, Mrs. Percy pointed out. Two methods have been worked out to fit both jobs and schooling into their routines:

Under the "school cooperative plan" students will receive credits toward graduation for afternoon employment related to school courses.

The second method is to arrange class schedules so that students will be free to take part-time jobs.

School Emphasized

While local school officials and Government department heads endorse the part-time work experiment as contributing to a solution of the local labor shortage, all agree that completion of school work is essential to the futures of the young workers.

Work and school attendance were successfully combined last year by 125 high school seniors, who were employed afternoons by Government agencies, banks, insurance offices and department stores. Opportunity for full-time employment after graduation was offered to most of them.

Expanded Program

The business school-work cooperative plan will be expanded this year if students find it useful, according to Dr. John J. Frank Dame, head of business training in District schools. Teachers feel that the program is educationally sound as well as of use to the community, he said.

Vocational students studying radio and printing last year received credit for commercial work done during the school term. Science and social science credits will be given some of the boys who combined farm work in Montgomery County this summer with special reading and notebook work.

Also supporting the plan were Mrs. Bernice Hypps, in charge of business training in Negro schools here, and John McCormack, personnel director for the Riggs banks.

"We are pretty enthusiastic about the cooperative program," McCormack declared. "We find it gives us an opportunity to employ valuable workers. Comparatively speaking," he added, "No employes from the schools do a higher average of work than 10 applicants of a corresponding age hired at random."

Many Hired Last Year

Mrs. Cecilia K. Foote, personnel technician at the Department of Agriculture's Food Distributio Administration, where 30 high school girls worked during the spring semester, stated they made "a very high type of employe, receptive to training. Full-time summer jobs at the department were offered to many, she said.

Figures compiled for the 1943 spring semester reveal under the plan high school seniors put in 40,000 hours of work in stores and offices. They were paid $20,000 in prevailing wages. School representatives visited the places of employment to note the working conditions and study student performances.

Students compelled to leave school last year for financial reasons were able to get their diplomas under the cooperative plan, Dr. Dame said. Principal object of the program, however, is to give attending students valuable, supervised experience while jobs are plentiful, while enabling them to finish their studies, he pointed out.

Shoplifting Increase Held Alarming

Municipal Court cases of shoplifting by Government girls are increasing at an alarming rate, it was learned yesterday.

In general, shoplifting cases show an increase of 50 per cent in the last three months. Much of this has been due to "respectable" Government girls, court attaches said.

Assistant U. S. Attorney John Diamond, in charge of Government cases in Municipal Court, disclosed that at least three times a week he has had charges placed against clerks who couldn't resist taking wearing apparel from local department stores.

Diamond said that he has nolle prossed almost all of the cases because "it was the first slip-up of these girls."

Diamond suggested that it seemed primarily a personnel problem of Government agencies.

"These girls, my investigations show," Diamond said, "are trying to live too high and in their attempts to do so, stooped to shoplifting. It is a shame that something isn't done about the situation."

A typical case occurred yesterday. A 21-year-old clerk was charged with stealing $149 in clothing from a downtown store. She made $120 a month and sent $50 home for support of her parents. She said she was unable to buy "decent clothing with the remainder.

Judge Margold referred her case to the probation office.

WPB Post Is Filled

Appointment of Garfield R. McDonald of Cleveland, Ohio, as assistant director of the textile, clothing and leather division of the War Production Board was announced yesterday. McDonald will continue as chief of the clothing branch of the division.

Randolph Asks Aid of NCHA In Slum Clearance Bill Draft

Representative Randolph (Democrat) of West Virginia yesterday called upon the National Capital Housing Authority to assist in preparation of a bill to provide for eventual clearance of all slums in the District of Columbia.

Randolph, chairman of the House District Committee, declared that the hearings on the housing situation here conducted by Representative D'Alesandro (Democrat) of Maryland clearly showed the need for such legislation. D'Alesandro is chairman of the Public Health Subcommittee of the House District Committee. His report issued last June describing some of Washington's housing as "viciously insanitary" was widely quoted throughout the United States.

During the many weeks of the hearings conducted by D'Alesandro, Randolph was in constant attendance.

Both he and Representative Hebert (Democrat) of Louisiana expressed amazement at the disclosure that there were 967 outdoor privies of a type not approved by the U. S. Public Health Service, within the District, and that there are 10,000 flush privies, located in back yards within the borders of the Nation's Capital.

Randolph requested D'Alesandro to conduct the hearings after Representative Plumley (Republican) of Vermont launched a vehement attack upon the negligence which had led to the development of so much slum property in the District. Plumley read into the Congressional Record a series of Post articles describing housing conditions here.

Provision for clearing slums in the District is one of the most vital questions concerning the Capital to face Congress, Randolph told The Post. He said there was a growing realization in Congress of the urgency of such legislation.

4 Found Innocent Of Whisky Sale Without License

Judge Walter J. Casey in Municipal Court directed a verdict of innocent yesterday in a case of three men and a woman accused of the sale of whisky without a license last November at what was formerly the "Spotlight Club" at 476 K st. nw.

The defendants were Louis Albaugh, 42, of Baltimore; Edward Everson, 37, of 2703 Bladensburg rd. ne., and Miss Mildred Sonken, 38, and Vincent Grillo, 39, both of 2905 Otis st. ne. They went on trial on Thursday.

Judge Casey declared the four innocent at the conclusion of the Government's case, ruling there was insufficient evidence to allow the case to go to the jury. The defendants were represented by H. Clifford Allder and Charles E. Ford.

Admiral Sexton To Be Buried in Arlington Today

High-ranking naval officers will act as pallbearers at funeral services in Fort Myer Chapel today at 12:30 p. m. for Rear Admiral Walton Roswell Sexton, who died Thursday at the Naval Medical Center at Bethesda. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

Capt. Robert D. Workman, USN, chief of chaplains, will conduct the services for the late admiral, who was chairman of the Navy General Board until a year ago and had been in the naval service since 1893.

Pallbearers will be Admirals Arthur J. Hepburn, Thomas C. Hart, Harry E. Yarnell, Edward C. Kalbfus and Claude C. Bloch, Lieut. Comdr. John W. Morse, USN, retired; Maj. E. C. Kavanaugh, USA, and J. W. Powell.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Chicago, Subcapital Of Midwest, Booming

Editor's note: This column, written while Jerry Kluttz was touring Federal agencies in the field, was delayed in transit.

Chicago—This is the subcapital of the Midwest. In this, the Nation's second largest city, are 150 different Federal agencies that have more than 100,000 civilian employes. Uncle Sam is the city's best tenant, occupying more than 80 different buildings. The city claims to have the most employes moved from Washington in the decentralization program.

Since Pearl Harbor the number of Federal employes here has tripled. The War Department is the one big agency with 45,000 civilians. Postoffice is runner-up with 15,000 employes. Navy has a few thousands, mostly inspectors in war plants.

More than 750,000 persons have been interviewed for Federal jobs since Pearl Harbor in this Civil Service region that covers Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan. In the region are an estimated 215,000 Federal workers, about the same number as are located in the five boroughs of New York City. An average of 12,000 people has been hired throughout the region every month by Uncle Sam, the majority to fill vacancies. Turnover, however, is down now that the Army is laying off several thousand employes and personnel in other agencies is "frozen" by Budget Bureau ceilings.

Chicago, in fact, is one of the few cities I've visited that doesn't have a large number of unfilled Federal jobs. The Civil Service Commission appears to be able to fill the needs. In Detroit, however, the story is different. Federal pay scales are beneath those in private industry and it's a real problem to hire qualified people for Uncle Sam. Exams for typists and stenographers, for example, have been abandoned as prospective employes refuse to go through the preliminaries.

Chicago has all the appearances of a boomtown. The newspapers have from 5 to 10 solid pages of help wanted ads and the Army Engineers and Maritime Commission remind the populace that they need people through large signs on the outside of gayly decorated streetcars. Hotels are jam-packed and prices are of the Washington variety, and that's high.

Army employes—military and civilians—are sore at a War Department office here, the war bond branch of the Fiscal Office. They bought and paid for war bonds more than a year ago through the payroll savings plan and they haven't all been delivered. The employes, naturally, want to know when their bonds will be delivered and the best guess now is that they'll have them within three months. Bonds that have been purchased since January 1 have been delivered on time.

One official here said that last year's backlog would be cleared up a lot faster if high-ranking officers and others with influence would stop making the division search for their individual records and cause their bonds to be delivered out of turn. The office was moved here in the early spring and it has been built up to around 3500 employes. The transfer, of course, delayed the work.

The system used in cutting off 105,000 civilians and military men from Army Service Forces was given its first trial at the Sixth Service Command Headquarters here, which is under Major General Aurand. Washington gave General Aurand a bulk allotment of employes and with the authority to use them as he saw fit. Personnel has been constantly reduced. Since June 30 civilians have been cut from 15,907 to 14,889 and the military reduced from 21,387 to 17,773. Civilians are used to replace officers and enlisted men whenever possible.

Eighty per cent of the Army's food requirements are purchased from the Quatermaster Depot here. The depot must furnish supplies for 24 million meals daily. Fresh fruits, vegetables and meat the country-over are purchased through the quartermaster marketing center here. In the depot are roasted some 50,000 pounds of coffee daily. Expert tasters sip samples of coffee to be sure the quality is right. Synthetics have been developed, a good substitute for butter. Tea, maple syrup, prunes, lemons, mince meat, and oranges have been compressed into tablets.

The Signal Corps depot, which connects with quartermaster, ships an average of 3200 tons of communications equipment a week in and out. When war broke out, there was a critical shortage of radio mechanics and depot arranged for the training of some 12,000 civilians and 6000 soldiers. Sixteen Midwest radio schools were taken over and the bottleneck soon was broken. The depot has about 2500 civilians now. In early spring it had 3000. About 46 per cent of the employes are Negro . . . The Federal Diary of the Air is on WRC tomorrow at 4:35 p. m.

Bond Sales Approach 6 Million

D. C. Runs Ahead Of Same Period in 2d Loan; Official Report Due Today

By Lin Celdon
Post Staff Writer

The District's Third War Loan drive, entering its third day today, already is running ahead of the April 12 Second War Loan campaign for the same number of days, it was learned unofficially last night.

At this time during the Second Loan drive Washingtonians had purchased $10,257,885.75 in bonds and securities. Actual figures on the campaign now in full swing will not be announced until late today.

The Quiz Kid show and the International Harvester Co. together, it was pointed out, have resulted in a sale of 4½ million dollars; one million to the company and 3½ million dollars through the Quiz Kids program to be presented in Constitution Hall September 29 at 7:30 p. m.

Quiz Kid Bond Tickets Must Be Exchanged

Holders of Quiz Kid tickets, given out at the time of bond purchases, must exchange them for seating tickets at Cappel's Concert Bureau in Ballard's at 1340 G st. nw., the District Third War Loan Committee said last night.

The committee reported that while nearly all the seats have been sold, only a few of the exchange tickets have been presented at Cappel's in exchange for seating tickets. The committee urged immediate exchange of all such tickets.

Adding to that was one million reported in sales late yesterday to three buyers and through a theater, and the total exclusive of individual sales to the thousands supporting the drive, was nearly six million last night.

One of the sales was to Washington Local, No. 74, of the International Hod Carriers, Building and Laborers Union of America and was for $50,000, according to President Joseph V. Moreschi, who said the international union has purchased $1,250,000 in securities.

Another of the sales was to the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Union and was for $100,000, according to Gustave M. Bugniazet, secretary. The union now holds $1,100,000 in bonds.

The third was that of the Washington Real Estate Board. It purchased $1000 in bonds, according to Charles J. Rush, secretary.

John J. Payette and Carter T. Barron, co-chairman of the local motion picture industry's war activities committee, said last night the million dollar bond premier of the "For Whom the Bell Tolls," slated for Loew's Capitol September 15, was expected to bring in $1,900,000.

Basis for Tickets

Tickets are issued through bond sales. Seats "cost" from a $10,000 bond down to $25 bonds, with the lower bonds holding the majority of seats. The sale yesterday already totaled nearly one million.

Still another sale, the figures of which were not announced, was that of the Washington Division of the Safeway Stores, according to John A. Reilly, chairman of the District Committee.

The company turned its entire receipts of yesterday into war bonds of the Third War Loan, he said.

"This is in keeping with a national Safeway's policy whereby approximately two million in bonds are being purchased," Reilly said by way of indication what the Friday sale to the company represented.

Meanwhile, employes continued to hold enthusiastic meetings. Scheduled for today was an OCD bond rally at the Coolidge Senior High School, 5th and Tuckerman sts. nw., at 7 p. m. Treasury Department speakers are yet to be assigned. Many others are scheduled throughout the city similar to those held yesterday when Tech. Sergt. Claude Blackwell, of the Sicilian campaign, and Emmett Leo Sheehan, representing the Treasury, spoke before a large gathering of the Washington Gas Light Co. J. Austin Canfield of the Treasury, also spoke.

Employes of the General Electric Co. held a 5:30 rally last night at the Shoreham Building at which Coxswain George Haboush, of the African Campaign, spoke with Charles Drayton of the Treasury. J. E. Schwartz, chairman of the firm's drive committee, said the employes were working in 8 groups for the success of the campaign.

Some Comparisons

The Second War Loan sale during the first three days amounted to approximately one-seventh of the total quota of 70 million. Campaigners here last night said that with the District quota in this drive 94 million, the city would have to purchase between 13 and 14 million by comparison by the end of today to equal the first three days of the last drive. They say this has already been done and cite previous sales of six million.

Significance of Great Army Show Unfolds for 115,000 Visitors

women in the Nation have taken their stations to solicit for the 15 billion loan," declared Gamble.

"More than 10,000 newspapers have advertised the Third War Loan drive in their columns and thousands of outdoor advertisers have given space on bill boards to bring home the message," Gamble said.

Thousands of radio programs, he explained, have been devoting time to its significance and "are continuing to do so."

"It is Democracy in action.

"The Treasury Department in collaboration with The Washington Post is putting on 'Back the Attack' with the aid of the Army's might to bring home to the people what the real significance of the Third War Loan really is," he said.

Stimson Makes Appeal

Secretary of War Stimson last night told a galaxy of high chieftains of America's mightiest Army and an assemblage of 25,000 persons at the "Back the Attack" action show they would never have a clearer or better opportunity of saving American lives by the investment of their money than by supporting the Third War Loan.

More than 50,000 persons yesterday visited the great array of exhibits, the two action shows and retreat ceremony, crowding the Washington Monument Grounds far in advance of each performance.

High ranking officers and officials of both the Army and Navy mingled with enlisted soldiers, sailors, marines and civilian visitors about th emyriad exhibits of all branches of the land fighting force.

Campbell Expected

It was announced last night that Maj. Gen. Levin H. Campbell, Chief of Ordnance, would arrive this morning for a complete tour of the "Back the Attack" show, beginning at 10 o'clock.

In the meanwhile among the distinguished Army officers, who visited the show yesterday was Brig. Gen. E. G. Knox of the Australian army, who is en route home from England.

General Knox witnessed the afternoon action show.

High naval officials also visited "Back the Attack," including Rear Admiral I. E. Bass, Capt. E. G. Kintner, Capt. A. S. Farquhar and Capt. R. C. Davis, all of the Naval Compensation Board. Other officers on the grounds during the afternoon were Maj. Gen. T. J. Hayes, Brig. Gen. G. M. Wells, Brig. Gen. James Kirk, all of the Ordnance Department.

Twenty-three guests accompanied Maj. Gen. W. D. Styer, chief of staff of the Army Service Forces, turned out to witness the swift-moving action show and to hear the Secretary of War's speech. They were:

Col. J. M. Roamer, director of intelligence; Col. Kilbourne Johnston, acting director of control division; Maj. Robert S. Brown, acting director of technical information; Brig. Gen. Joe N. Dalton, director of personnel; Col. R. T. Beurket, acting director of military training; Brig. Gen. F. A. Heileman, acting director of operations; Howard Bruce, director of procurement material division; Maj. Gen. H. K. Loughry, chief of finance; Brig. Gen. Madison Pearson, acting director of administration; Maj. Gen. E. B. Gregory, quartermaster general; Brig. Gen. Herman F. Safford, chief production service branch.

And Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, chief of Engineers; Brig. Gen. Rollo C. Ditto, acting chief Chemical Warfare Service; Maj. Gen. H. C. Ingles, chief Signal officer; Maj. Gen. Norman T. Kirk, Surgeon General; Brig. Gen. Robert H. Wylie, acting chief, Transportation Corps; Maj. Gen. James A. Ulio, adjutant general; Brig. Gen. Archer L. Lerch, acting provost marshal general; Brig. Gen. Joseph W. Byron, chief, Army Exchange Service; Maj. Gen. M. C. Cramer, judge advocate general; Maj. Gen. William R. Arnold, chief of Chaplains; Col. Ovita Culp Hobby, director, Womans' Army Corps; Col. Raymond W. Hardenbergh, acting chief, special service division.

'Back the Attack' Free to the Public

There will be three big action shows daily in the arena. Seats are available to these shows for 6000 persons.

At the matinee performances at 2:30 p. m. each day 1000 of these seats will be reserved for school children. The remaining 5000 seats at the 2:30 matinee will be open to the public on a first come, first served basis.

At the 4:45 p. m. "retreat" programs all seats will be open to the public, also first come, first served.

Seats for the evening performances, at 8:45 each night, go to bond buyers. Of the 6000 seats 3000 will go to Federal agencies for bond purchases from Treasury Minute Men. Another 2500 will be distributed to bond buyers who purchase their bonds from banks, postoffices, in department stores, from bond booths—wherever bonds are sold. The remaining 500 will be distributed at the direction of the D. C. war finance committee to organizations and salesmen who have completed their bond quotas.

Those who get seat tickets for the evening performance must use them on the date stamped. They must also be in their seats by 8:45 p. m., after which time all vacant seats will be thrown open to the public.

Every Bond a Help

Secretary Stimson said as an American he took the greatest pride in this superb materiel of war.

"American genius has designed it," he explained, "American skill and toil are producing it. American fighting courage is using it to crush the tyrant strain from the world and insure the preservation of our freedom."

He charged the attentive audience not to forget that every bond purchased would help to protect and save from the missles of their enemies the lives of "the American young men who are fighting for you."

Secretary Stimson's speech was broadcast over the Blue network.

Undersecretary of the Treasury Bell, who followed said, " We must not spend a single life more that we need to—we must spend all the dollars needed for shiploads of armor and weapons to keep our soldiers more than well supplied to complete the task assigned to them. . . .

Sacrifices Stressed

"If you have to miss a meal now and then—well, just remember your brothers and husbands and friends are missing a good many more meals than you are; and remember too, that they are fighting on 67 different battlefronts."

Raymond Clapper, noted columnist, who spoke yesterday afternoon at the action show, told of incidents he had witnessed in Africa and Sicily.

He said: "...If you knew how those men crave just a plain American hamburger, how weary they become of eating canned rations, how they dream of stepping up to a soda fountain in the corner drugstore you would buy bonds until it really hurt.

"Do you think about those things as you figure how much you can afford to invest in war bonds?"

General Styer, told the huge audience "The Army Service Forces are participating in this Third War Loan exhibition with the full confidence that the American people, given opportunity to view at first hand the tremendous amount of equipment needed by the Army, will gladly 'Back the Attack' with their dollars."

Twenty thousand visitors on the opening day visited the Chemical Warfare Service exhibit at the "Back the Attack" show, it was estimated by Lieut. Col. William Brooks, who is here from Edgewood Arsenal.

One of the chief attractions for the chemical warfare section is the grim, compact 4.2-in mortar, which shot its way into Sicily at the head of the Allied invasion.

In the meantime the second day's afternoon action show rolled through their program without mishap—although there was an added bit of excitement when two war dogs got into a peace-time brawl. The matter was patched up quickly, however by the soldiers in charge of the dogs and the show continued.

Last night's performance drew huge crowds and was the feature of the day's activity. A highlight of the evening came when they turned down the arena lights, and when they came on again one of the Four Freedoms, for which the war is being fought, stood out in bold relief under the glare of thousand candle power searchlights.

Silence gripped the thousands, for before them stood a humble jeep, over the hood of which was an altar. And standing before the altar, head bowed, was a "typical" chaplain. As he bowed there came words over the loud speaker system—"to give everyone strength to do their part so that our soliders may come home to us safe and victorious." Many an "a-men" was heard.

Lights Are Dimmed

Once again the lights were dimmed, and when the searchlights found their mark, it was a lone bugler. The soft notes of the soldiers' farewell—"Go to sleep"—better known as "Taps," sailed forth and from away off to one side of the grounds came the echo, softer, but none-the-less effective—'Go to sleep."

The show has a vivid, human side as well as technical, those in charge point out. Designed to entertain as well as instruct and enlighten, the directors have not overlooked the fact that Americans have not forgotten how to laugh.

The announcer introduced "just an old reliable Army truck," as it rolled into the area. Nothing unusual was seen about the truck. But then it broke down, with a loud report. The sergeant driver got out and raised the hood. Finally a soldier jumped from inside the rear of the machine. Then another, and another as the crowd went wild as more and more soldiers came forth until 25 had disembarked—all from the inside of the "old reliable truck."

They tried to push the stubborn machine. No use. Finally the sergeant shouted, "might as well get it boys." But what, the crowd wondered. Then it came, from inside the truck, too, the lowly jeep. It towed the big "old reliable" away amid cheers and waves of applause.

Dance Band on Hand

Because they wished to be a part of the "Back the Attack" show, a dance band of the Seventy-sixth Infantry Division came all the way from the A. P. Hill Military Reservation to play for the afternoon action show.

This afternoon's program follows:

Noon Grounds open. All exhibits.

2:30 Parade in the arena.
2:37 Close order drill.
2:42 Artillery maneuvers.
2:47 Treasury Department.
3:02 Cavalry detachment.
3:07 Jeep jamboree.
3:10 Dogs of war.
3:18 Jeep comedy demonstration.

Divergence Seen in Gas Use Increase

Excess Issuance And Counterfeit Coupons Given as Probable Factors

By Linton Burkett
Post Staff Writer

Heavy divergence of gasoline stocks in Washington to illegal, or irregular channels, apparently was revealed here yesterday by figures obtained from the District of Columbia gasoline tax division which showed that consumption here had increased two million gallons a month over January of this year.

When the ban on pleasure driving was imposed last January the sales here dropped from 12,769,386 gallons sold in 1942 to 8,114,105 in January of 1943.

As the months passed and enforcement of the ban grew more and more lax, the figures showed a steady increase in consumption until in June consumption was two million gallons higher than in January.

Despite Slash in Value

This has resulted despite the slash in value of the A coupons and some reductions in the B and C coupons.

Questioned as to his opinion as to how this could be explained, John L. Laskey, local OPA enforcement attorney, said:

"It would have to be viewed in the light of several factors, but the size of the figure surely indicates there is something definitely wrong."

It has been pointed out by Laskey and others that the illegal or irregular sale of gasoline is through the use of counterfeit, stolen or irregular ownership of coupons.

This means that if a motorist succeeds in buying gasoline without coupons, but at a premium, the dealer who sells to him must make up his shortage of coupons. He either buys the valuable 2 or C coupons which have been counterfeited, or from some owner who can spare them.

Thus, when the wholesaler calls on him for coupons to allow replenishing the retailer's tank, the dealer is able to produce them.

Excess Issuance

A considerable amount of the increased consumption may readily be attributed to the almost universal practice of ration boards of issuing a motorist more coupons than he actually needs on the basis of the plea he puts forward, some OPA officials said. The AAA was unable to explain the increase.

Robert K. Thompson, local OPA director, expressed considerable bewilderment at the figures on gasoline sales. He said that it was possible more gasoline was coming into the city as the result of the fact gasoline could be brought in instead of fuel oil as the weather became warmer.

He admitted that the OPA was unable to tailor its issuance of coupons to meet the gasoline supply instead of the needs claimed by motorists, which may have resulted in some increases in sales.

D. C. Water Budget Rises $1,697,176

$775,000 Increase Accounted For by Reservoir Expansion At Georgetown

By Elwin Stouffer
Post Staff Writer

Approximately a 75 per cent increase in the expenditures of the water division for the District due to the wartime increase in population was reflected yesterday in the budget submitted to the District Commissioners.

The total sum requested, which represents both the expenditures of the Water Department and the Washington Aqueduct, is $3,938,584. The sum represents an increase of $1,697,176 over the current year.

The chief items causing the increase are $775,000 for the remodeling of the Georgetown reservoir, which supplies the McMillan filter plant.

Main Cleaning

The next largest item in the proposed increase is the cleaning and lining of water mains which represents an additional expenditure of $200,000 over last year. The fund provides for the cleaning and lining of major water mains to restore full water carrying capacity where possible.

It was pointed out that many of the older mains are now overtaxed. This has resulted in low water pressures and a decreased supply. The original plans for the completion of this program, which included new trunk lines, called for an expenditure of $250,000.

An item, which deals with recent developments within the water department and has been under public scrutiny, is one for $10,000 for refunds for overcharges made to customers. This represents an increase of $6500 over last year which is explained by the fact that the last appropriation was too low and that credits had been given on future water bills which had to be accounted for.

Meter Readers Needed

Humphrey Beckett, superintendent of the Water Department, said yesterday that the wartime difficulty of securing competent meter readers was in most part responsible for the over-readings which necessitated the refunds.

The District's water system is divided into two divisions—the Water Department and the Washington Aqueduct. The former has control of the distribution of water, the latter of the supply.

Specific requests of the Water Department total $1,610,066, an increase of $345,686 over the current year.

The Washington Aqueduct, which is under the supervision of the U. S. Army Engineer's office, will cost an estimated $2,328,518 during the coming year, which represents an increase of $1,426,490.

Water Department receipts, out of which operating expenses are taken, are estimated to run $3,344,000, representing a deficit over expected expenditures of $504,652.

Traffic Department Requests $491,920 for 1945 Fiscal Year

The Department of Vehicles and Traffic estimates that $491,920 will be needed for the 1945 fiscal year expenditures which represents an increase of $124,100 over current expenditures.

One of the chief reasons for the increase was the request for $20,000 for new automobile license tags. During the current year, due to the scarcity of metal, small inserts, denoting the year, were added to the old tags. The desire for new tags is based entirely upon the availability of metal during the coming year.

The budget reflects an optimism for increased employment needs. Prior to Pearl Harbor the staff numbered 108, which was reduced to 90 because of the decrease in traffic and auto registrations. A request is now made for 18 jobs to be restored as it is believed that traffic will be considerably heavier during 1945.

Among the new jobs proposed are two associate engineers at $2000 each, one assistant at the same figure, one engineer aide at $1800, seven motor vehicle inspectors at $1620, and four clerks and three graphotype operators.

Of the entire budget $303,000 is for personal services and the remainder for supplies and maintenance.

At the present time 1947 traffic lights and 146 illuminated pedestrian warning lights are operating for which an estimated $43,000 for electricity will be needed. New installations and maintenance of signals will approximate $27,000.

One of the major items in the proposed increase is traffic safety education which will run to approximately $30,000 representing an increase of $15,000 over current expenditures. This includes the display of films before school and civic groups, leaflets for elderly persons, a house organ called The Beacon, posters, a traffic safety news letter to 2500 community leaders, and a weekly 15-minute radio broadcast, besides other precautionary releases.

MAKE IT DO . . .

NO SOAP CHIPS? MAKE YOUR OWN

By Martha Ellyn

Don't waste soap! Those odds and ends of soap cakes which show up in every household can do their bit in aiding the war effort. The less fat it takes to make soap for home use, the more there will be available for manufacturing gunpowder. Certainly no one wants to be guilty of wasting soap when its ingredients can be used against our foes. Even the soap manufacturers, who in normal times sell all of the products possible, are advising women to conserve the soap supply.

Martha Ellyn

But there is more to the soap saga than saving the bits. Intelligent use of them will help the home-front strategy. War restrictions of manufactured products make many of our home furnishings irreplaceable.

It should be kept in mind, too, that clean things last longer than dirty ones. Clean surroundings are a safeguard against disease. Safeguarding health is of paramount importance, now that there is a shortage of doctors and so much work to be done.

It's easy to make bar soaps into jellies by shaving, grating or grinding them up and adding water that is hot but not boiling. When soap flakes, chips or granules are not at hand you'll find these jellies will give you better service in many of your soap and water chores than the ordinary cake soap. They're particularly convenient for washbasin laundering and dishwashing, for thick rich suds will foam up quickly.

Those bits and pieces of bar soap which it is to be hoped that you have been saving, may be converted into jelly in the same way. If you keep two small jars at the sink you may use one for scraps of the mild soaps and reserve the other for the harsher laundry variety. Fill each jar with hot water from the faucet and let it stand until the soap is dissolved. After each use refill the jar with hot water.

Wash Shower Curtains

Shower curtains (even the fancy ones) can be cleaned by laying the curtains on a flat surface such as kitchen table or floor and washing with sponge or soft cloth frequently dipped in warm soapy water. Repeat until curtain is clean. Rinse thoroughly with plenty of clear warm water. Wash both sides of the curtain and hang up on the regular shower rod in the bathroom to dry. Or the damp curtain can be carefully hung over a clothes line in the shade.

Don't Scour

Never scour porcelain enameled utensils with harsh abrasives. If food sticks to the pan, soak it in hot water to loosen. Then wash with hot water and soap. In stubborn cases, fill the utensil with water and heat it slowly.

Save the bits of bar soap to make soap jelly. First shred the soap pieces on a grater, then dissolve in hot water and let cool.

Jellied soap may be whipped into a foamy lather with the egg beater. This later may be used to clean window shades, upholstery and other household furnishings which are washable.

Upholstery, if colorfast, can be shampooed safely if very dry lather made from soap bits is used. Frequent regular care will make upholstery wear longer.

If your window shades are the washable kind, soap lather may be used to clean them. After applying soap lather wipe up the soiled foam with sponge dipped in clear water.

MAKE A ONE-DRESS WARDROBE

By Dorothy Roe

Associated Press Feature Writer

Best bet for a thrifty home sewer: a good basic dress of simple cut and functional fabric, with a flock of bright accessories to give it more lives than a cat.

The quick-change idea is growing by leaps and bounds in this year of wartime economy, so the dress that lends itself to different collars, cuffs, jewelry and jabots is likely to work overtime.

You can make yourself a fall wardrobe in one fell swoop if you tackle a simple, collarless dress that buttons down to a tapered waistline and has no excess frills or drapes. Concentrate on perfect fit and fine finishing details, then go to work on the trimmings—varied collar and cuff sets, lace edgings and jabots that can be whisked on and off in less time than it takes to say, "I haven't a thing to wear!"

If you are ambitious, shoot the works and make matching hats and gloves. You can buy patterns for all of these, and if you get stage fright in front of a needle, there's a local sewing center in your own community that will teach you how to whip out a wardrobe with a professional touch.

Once you get the knack, you'll find that observing a few simple rules in dressmaking can make all the difference between just something to cover you and a dress with a custom-made air. Here are a few basic tips:

3—Keep bodice details toward center front as indicated in the pattern chart, even if width adjustments are necessary. If you must add an inset strip to the pattern for extra width, do so outside the detail area because darts, tucks and pleats must follow down from the center line. The same principle applies to skirt measurements. These two inflexible rules hold the secret of achieving slender lines.

4—Use pinning instead of basting wherever possible so your fabric won't look worked over. Many sewing machines have a hinged presser foot that jumps over pins with ease.

5—Press seams as you go along, to avoid puckering and inaccuracies later on. You can escape ugly pressing marks and stains by using a press cloth that's chemically treated to force steam into the seams when a little water is sprinkled on the cloth's top surface.

6—Visualize your finished dress as you progress, but make sure that you plan each step in an orderly manner and complete one operation before tackling the next.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

An Orderly Woman

Mrs. Whisk is an orderly woman,
No loose ends;
To her perfection of arrangements
Everyone else bends.
Her desk, bureau and pocketbook
Are neat and spare,
A day-old letter or newspaper
Gets the air.
Her filing is kept up to the minute,
So are her hems and belts,
But she never has a moment
To do anything else.

Today's Social Notes

(From The Truthtown Torch)

Another new occupation for women—that of handbag secretary, has been devised by Mrs. Montclair St. Vitus, Truthtown's ace career and project woman. Mrs. St. Vitus, who recently simplified her life by employing a full-time personal shopper, yesterday appeared at a committee meeting accompanied not only by her social secretary and her business secretary, but by her handbag secretary, Miss Zenobia Phile.

"With the growth of my war work and business and social projects," explained Mrs. St. Vitus, "my handbag had steadily expanded in size, and its contents have become so confusing to me that I decided the simplest way out was to employ a special secretary to take care of it."

Miss Phile, the handbag secretary, carries a small card index of the handbag's contents and refers to it whenever Mrs. St. Vitus makes a request for anything in the bag. Steppit, Mrs. St. Vitus' secretary, usually carries in the handbag when his employer and her secretaries arrive at a meeting.

Mrs. Thornberry Flitterjig, always a center of attention at cocktail parties, now has become doubly so—all because of her new diamond and ruby clip, which is really a vitamin container. It is in the shape of a tiny trunk and will carry a large store of vitamin supplies. These Mrs. Flitterjig generously parcels out to her friends, who instantaneously feel themselves become strong and hearty enough to go in search of additional drinks.

With the Victory Gardeners

Mrs. Rosewell Clymer, who once was blacklisted from the Garden Lovers League, Inc., because she had planted morning glories in her formal garden, now is getting even with her erstwhile enemies. She is organizing an exclusive society to be known as the Ladies Radish Growers Foundation. She has called a hand-picked group of women to a meeting at the Hotel Swank Monday to lay plans for the new society, which will promote radish growing and also hold vegetable garden tours next summer. Mrs. Clymer's social prestige has been greatly enhanced this summer, as her back-yard vegetable garden, artificially watered, and tended by an expert agriculturist, has produced outstanding vegetables which she is distributing to her friends. Many who once snubbed her are now cultivating her friendship.

Return of the Natives

The dearth of men this summer at Barbecue Beach, Truthtown's favorite seaside resort, has caused returning debs and matrons to rejoice in getting home. At a recent dinner given at her beach villa by Mrs. DeLancey Dizard, the only men dinner partners available were Dr. Aurelius Birdsong, society's octogenarian ornithologist; the much-married Philander Plunkette, who is currently being divorced by Gwendolyn (Snooksy) Twitter; Prince Paranoia, who recently was involved in a bigamy scandal; Clancy Percheron, who is always assiduously chaperoned by Mrs. Percheron; Livingston DeCrasher, perennial extra man and mustache cup collector, now suffering from a bad case of gout, and young Buzzie Bellwether, rejected by his draft board for mental defects.

Big Sister

A movement to aid Government girls who go stockingless has been started by Mrs. Featherton Dabbler. She is organizing a benefit to raise funds to supply them with small insect spray guns to keep away flies, mosquitoes, etc. "It is most distressing," said Mrs. Dabbler yesterday, "that these young women should not be able to sit in the parks or even on the street cars without being annoyed by insects—I am speaking, of course, in the literal sense of the word. The small pocket spray I have designed will afford simple protection. In fact it has possibilities for all unprotected women everywhere. By next summer I hope to have these sprays, which can easily fit in a handbag, in the hands of all barelegged girls and women."

Women's Club News

This month sees the resumption of full-scale activities for the members of the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers, whose executive committee held its initial meeting of the season recently, preparatory to the regular meeting of the board of managers on Tuesday, September 14, at 11 a. m. in the board room of the NEA Building.

Mrs. P. C. Ellett, president, whose vacation consisted of a flying trip to Florida in July, where she witnessed the graduation of her older son, William, from OCS, has spent a busy summer perfecting plans for the coming year's work and keeping her membership in various civic committees current. One of the problems with which she and other members of her organization are concerned is that of safety for school children, who will be returning to their desks next week. In this connection, Mrs. Ellett is suggesting that for the children entering school for the first time, some plan for determining the safest route to their respective schools be devised.

"Some 8000 to 10,000 small children, 5 or 6 years of age, will be embarking upon their school careers within the next week," said Mrs. Ellett, "and there will be many others from other cities who will enter Washington schools for the first time. These children are, for the most part, unfamiliar with the best routes to travel to their school buildings and it would seem that parents should make an extra effort to determine such routes."

One method suggested by Mrs. Ellett was for parents to get in touch with their police precincts, find out which officer is assigned to school safety and consult with him as to the safest route. "The Boy Patrols, of course, are doing a splendid job in protecting young children at crossings," Mrs. Ellett said, "but the children themselves must be taught personal responsibility, and by guiding them for the first couple of days along the safest route much can be accomplished in reducing the accident rate among children in the lower-age brackets, which is the highest for any group in the city."

Mrs. Frank Borden, vice president of the congress, who is charged with the responsibility for conferences and Institutes, is busy making plans for the annual Leaders' Conferences, tentative dates for which have been set for September 28 and October 5, both Tuesdays. At these conferences, local unit officers and committee chairmen are given instructions, advice and assistance in planning their year's work and in acquaintnig them with their duties and responsibilities.

Mrs. John Bixler, membership chairman, under whose guidance last year the D. C. Congress membership reached an all-time high, is planning enthusiastically for the membership enrollment campaign this fall, and will hold a meeting with local membership chairmen early in October.

Other department heads and committee chairmen are eager to initiate their year's programs, and in spite of the "woman-power" shortage in volunteer positions, the D. C. Congress of Parents and Teachers is looking forward to a busy and profitable year.

Mrs. David Hornstein will give the first of a series of teas Tuesday, 1:30 p. m., at her home, to be held during the fall under the auspices of the Adas Israel Sisterhood.

Your Baby And Mine

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

Because many a mother these days does plan for her family and decide upon the number of children she would like to have, it doesn't seem out of place to discuss the birth months which are most advantageous.

At first thought it may seem ridiculous that one time of the year might be better than any other time. But if one lives in climates where sunshine is both pallid and limited for upward of six months of the year, and temperatures vary from damp cold to bitter cold, it is pretty obvious that children whose first six months will have to be lived in such conditions may suffer some handicaps to their physical development.

There may be good reason why research has discovered that more eminent men and women, which means those appearing in Who's Who, were born in February than any other month. And in choosing a good month in which to plan for a child, February tops my list as the best month of the year. Why?

Because it will be at least six weeks before the baby may be able to enjoy an airing, but after that he may be treated to all the benefits of sun and air from then on until late October. It is during these vital months that the baby does a large share of his growing, and it would be hard to argue that he wouldn't be improved by doing it out-of-doors rather than indoors.

Thus, if one were choosing months which, because of temperature alone, would be the most desirable months for baby's development, one would choose February, March, April, May, June or July as better choices than August, September, October, November, December and January.

Perhaps the early spring months have another advantage. They are an encouragement to the mother to nurse her baby. With a fall baby she might be tempted to argue that temperatures would offer no handicap to bottle feedings, so why not? But, facing the hot weather, she might be inclined to take no chances and to prefer to depend upon nature's own food.

Naturally, when babies are born in the fall, one will overcome the handicaps to limited sunshine and out-of-door airings by giving liberal doses of Vitamin D.

'Mexico Like Music Box,' Says Cristina Michels

Senorita Michels and Miss Lydia Langer Enjoying First Visit to Colorful Republic

By Marie McNair

Memories that will burn brightly for a long time to come are in the hearts of Senorita Cristina Michels, daughter of the Chilean Ambassador and Senora de Michels, and Miss Lydia Langer, Senator and Mrs. William Langer's daughter, soon to return from a gay whirl in Mexico City.

"Mexico is like a music box," is Cristina Michels' description of our border republic. It's her first visit to this country and she's completely enchanted with everything she has seen, everybody she has met.

With a brother, Rodolfo, living there and working as an engineer with one of the large mining companies, Cristina left Washington early in the summer to visit him; to meet his fiancee, Senorita Alicia Villagran, and to stay on for their wedding, which took place last month. Senora de Michels, who went down for the event, took Lydia Langer with her after receiving a pleading letter from her daughter that she would love to have her best friend with her to share in the fun.

Guests at Chilean Embassy

The two girls are guests at the Chilean Embassy in Mexico City. "We only sleep there," writes Cristina, "for we are invited out to luncheon and dinner every day."

In their pilgrimages to nearby towns and villages they saw the natives turning out beautiful silver work in Taxco; made a tour of the Palace of Cortez in Cuernavaca, adorned now with Rivera's murals, and were carried back to the time of that Spanish conquerer who ruled Mexico with all the fierceness of his nature. "I could just imagine him stalking through the great halls ordering the poor Mexicans to do his will," said Cristina. The town itself is beautiful, with gorgeous fields and mountains, flowers, picturesque cathedrals and churches, according to Senorita Michels. Taxco, too, is lovely, she says, with a quaintness about it contributed to by the houses of many colors, all soft pastel shades and trimmed in red.

The annual Black and White Ball, THE social event of Mexico City's season, tops everything for gayety, beauty and sheer fun, in Senorita Michel's opinion.

There is much speculation ahead of time as to who will be chosen queen of the ball. Senorita Michels had been named a princess to represent Chile; Miss Jean Wallace, daughter of the Vice President and Mrs. Wallace, was chosen to be the princess from the United States, and rumors were rife that to her would go the honor of reigning for the evening. But it fell instead to a beautiful Czechoslovakian girl, and justly so, Cristina said, for she was the most beautiful blonde creature imaginable.

Picture on View After Ball

As the name implies, the Black and White Ball requires the feminine guests to wear either black or white gowns, or a combination of the two. Senorita Michels chose the latter for her frock; so, too, did Miss Langer, and for a week following the ball Cristina's picture was on view in the downtown shop windows.

Asked to speak over the radio, Cristina, who has no fear of the "mike," had a script before her to read to her audience. Instead she interpolated into her speech her own impressions of Mexico and of her happy stay there, and it was here she coined the pretty phrase, "Mexico is like a music box."

Love-Ever in Season-Even In New Guinea

Somewhere in New Guinea, Sept. 8 (AP).—There is still time for matrimony in New Guinea during this business of war against Japan.

In a brief Army Protestant ceremony in the small office of a chaplain today, the marriage of Maj. Louis S. Green of Kansas City, Mo., and Army Nurse Second Lieut. Mary F. Chaplin of Falling Spring, Va., was solemnized with all the seriousness of a Fifth ave. wedding.

The chaplain officiateing was Lieut. Col. Ernest D. Elliott of Hammond, La. Col. John Crehan of Brooklyn, N. Y., gave the bride away, and the best man was First Lieut. Robert Newsome of Rapid City, S. Dak.

Corpl. Hilary Hux of Portsmouth, Va., played the violin.

Lieut. T. R. Graf, Bride On Honeymoon

Lieut. Theodore R. Graf, Signal Corps, USA, and his bride, the former Miss Eleanor Thomaides, are making their home at Fayetteville, N. C., after a short wedding trip. They were married in Walter Reed chapel last Friday. She was given in marriage by her grandfather, Thomas E. Stone, and was attended by Sergt. Sidney Ann Adams, USMCWR.

A small reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. George T. Thomaides, at 3900 14th st. The bride is a graduate of Dunbarton College and Lieutenant Graf is a graduate of the Univeristy of Iowa.

Purely Personal

Subaltern Mary Churchill, daughter of the British Prime Minister and Mrs. Winston Churchill, spent yesterday in Baltimore visiting war plants.

Squadron Leader R. Howard Phillips, RAF, and Mrs. Phillips of Woodside Park, Md., are vacationing at Orient Point, Long Island, for 10 days. They are accompanied by their children, Peter and Pamela.

Mr. and Mrs. William Stanley and their son Snowden are vacationing at the Homestead in Hot Springs, Va.

Mr. and Mrs. James W. Angell are spending several days in New York at the Weylin.

Mr. and Mrs. John Ross of Silver Spring, Md., have as their house guests Flying Officer Harry Haxton, RCAF, an instructor at the training school in Wayburn, Canada, and Mrs. Ross' sister, Miss Evelyn Price of Ottawa, Canada.

Maj. and Mrs. J. A. Munro have joined the early fall colony at The Homestead, Hot Springs, Va. Others from Washington who are vacationnig there include Mrs. M. D. Woodworth Johnson, Miss Gladys V. On Way to Canada to Live

MRS. DONALD S. THORN

Following their wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Donald S. Thorn, whose marriage took place here on Tuesday, will reside in Montreal, Canada. The bridegroom is a student at McGill University there. Holding a commission as ensign in the U. S. Naval Reserve, he will report for active duty upon completion of his medical course.

Mrs. Thorn is the former Miss Edith Frances Hopkins of Greensboro, N. C., and Washington, D. C. She is the daughter of Herbert Reid Hopkins of Greensboro and is a graduate of the Woman's College of the University of North Carolina.

The bridegroom is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Doran S. Thorn of Washington. He is a graduate of Georgetown University.

With the Rev. Henry Teller Cocke officiating, the wedding took place at high noon in All Saints Episcopal Church, Chevy Chase. Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a white satin gown, styled on princess lines with a lace yoke and long sleeves. Her finger-tip veil fell from a pearl coronet, and she carried a bouquet of white rosebuds and stephanotis.

Miss Juanita McKemy of Lexington, Va., and Washington was maid of honor, wearing an orchid taffeta gown. Her bouquet was of yellow rosebuds. Merton L. White of Washington was best man, and ushers were Joseph McDonald and John Henry Dettweiler.

Following the wedding there was a reception for members of the immediate families at the home of the bride's cousin, Mrs. Augustus Lotterhas, in Chevy Chase.

Mrs. Pirie Plans Return To England

"We'll be going home in the spring."

A soft Scottish burr accenting her words, Mrs. G. C. Pirie, wife of the former Air Attache at the British Embassy, was excited yesterday as she discussed her husbands' recent promotion. From the British Office of Information here had just come official announcement of Vice Air Marshal Pirie's appointment as Director General of Organization at the Air Ministry in London.

Vice Air Marshal Pirie, who has a host of friends in the city where he served as Air Attache from 1936-41, has been stationed in London for several months past. Prior to that he served in Cairo, his wife and two children having remained in Washington.

"We're all happy about the news," Mrs. Pirie continued. "All that is, save the children, who are quite gloomy about leaving America . . . they've been here since they were babies and feel they are leaving their homeland."

Mrs. Pirie plans to remain at her apartment here until spring and then join her husband in London. She is delighted with the prospect of seeing her native land after so many years of absence, and feels that she will have to get acquainted with it all over again. "But, I must admit, it will be hard to leave Washington," she adds regretfully; "we have had a wonderful eight years here."

Panama Official Is New Arrival In Washington

A new arrival in Washington is Rogelio Arosemena, representative of the provincial government of the State of Panama, Panama. When Senor Arosemena recently visited the Pan American Union he was accompanied both by his son—who has come to the United States to study at Georgetown University—and by Enrique A. Jimenez, Ambassador of Panama.

A frequent visitor to this country, Senor Arosemena had, nonetheless, never been at the Pan American Union before. He expressed his satisfaction at visiting the beautiful building and seeing the Panamanian flag put up in his honor "where such excellent work is carried on by Dr. Rowe and his assistants."

Senor Arosemena's trip, which is strictly nonofficial, will take him to Los Angeles, where his of Highland Park, Ill.

Washingtonians Back From N. C.

Wednesday marked the end of the season at Kill Devil Hills, N. C. where the cool sea breezes and inviting beach have provided a restful vacation for numerous Washingtonians this year.

The resort, along the North Carolina coast, is one of the oldest in the country, having first been opened soon after the Civil War, when it was only accessible by boat from Elizabeth City.

Three beaches — Nags Head, Kill Devil Hills and Kitty Hawk —were attractive to recent Washington visitors, among whom were the Benjamin Lambes, the Ray Tuckers, the Stephen Walters and the John Paul Ernest family.

Washington Holds Faint Lure For Family of OPA Official

Mrs. Bowles Now Managing Connecticut Farm; Three Daughters, Two Sons, Lend Helping Hand

The Chester Bowles family is up in the air these days—the question being whether to become Washingtonians or to remain on the farm in Essex, Conn., in which vicinity they've lived since 1934. For the time being the Essex farm is more attractive than Washington's crowded streets. The head of the house is in Washington carrying out his duties as General Manager and acting Administrator for OPA (the latter in the absence of Prentiss Brown, who returns to town next week).

With the exception of the OPA executive, Barbara, 16, who is in school at Brearley in New York City, and Chester, jr., 15, a student at Pomfret School in Connecticut, the farm in Essex is run almost exclusively by the Bowles family.

Mrs. Bowles, the former Dorothy Stebbins, a Vassar graduate who holds a master's degree from the Smith School of Social Work, manages the farm, which includes such tasks as harvesting hay, raising chickens, pigs, to say nothing of milking a cow. Occasionally a hired man comes in to help, but more often he doesn't show up. With the aid of Cynthia, 7, grammar school student; Sally, 5, and Samuel, 4, the chores are done, and done well, according to Mr. Bowles. This "life on the farm" has been something they've both always wanted for their children—thus the hesitation in bringing them to Washington.

A year ago Mrs. Bowles resigned her position as a member of the Connecticut War Council, in charge of social work and community service, because her domestic duties demanded all of her time. Despite her seemingly endless activity, though, she manages to get to Washington every other weekend to visit her husband.

Miss Christine Horn Becomes Bride of Ferdinand Perrone

New York's Little Church Around the Corner was the setting Wednesday for the marriage of Miss Christine Horn to Ferdinand D. Perrone.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. F. E. Horn of this city, and Mr. Perrone is a resident of New York. The ceremony took place at 12 noon in the presence of the immediate families.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attired in a white wedding gown, a full-length veil and carried a bouquet of orchids. Her matron of honor was her sister, Mrs. Norman R. Bradley of Lakehurst, N. J., and her cousin, Miss Matilda Horn, was maid of honor.

Anne Upton Engaged to Dr. Miller

Mrs. George Upton of Mathews, Va., and Marblehead, Mass., announces the engagement of her daughter, Anne Hetherington, to Dr. Ralph Bretney Miller, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Beard Miller of Springfield, Ohio.

Miss Upton attended the Ethel Walker School and graduated from Radcliffe College in 1938. She made her debut in Boston and was a member of the Junior League. At present she is working in the War Department in Washington.

Dr. Miller graduated from Wittenberg College and the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine. He spent two years as resident physican at the Massachusetts General Hospital and later practiced in Boston. At present he is directing the medical program of the Transcontinental and Western Airline's war assignment under the Air Transport Command in Washington.

The wedding will take place in October.

Several Weddings Crowd Calendar of the Week

Miss Mildred Adele Stohlman Is Wed To A. J. Sheridan, Jr.; Several Others Listed

A number of weddings crowded the calendar during the past week, among them the marriage of Miss Mildred Adele Stohlman, daughter of Mrs. John William Stohlman, to Andrew James Sheridan, jr. The ceremony, followed by a nupital mass, took place on Wednesday at the Shrine of the Most Blessed Sacrament, at 9 o'clock in the morning, with the Rev. Charles Gorman officiating.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Frederick Stohlman. She wore a gown of blush satin made with a train. A Juliet cap of matching satin held the finger-tip illusion veil, and she carried a prayer book with white orchids.

Mrs. James Wade Anderson, sister of the bride, was her only attendant. Her gown was of flame taffeta and velvet with which she wore a Juliet cap of the same shade. She carried a muff bouquet of flame-colored gladioli. Charles Guthrie was the best man and the ushers were James Wade Anderson and Carl Weidner. The soloist was Mrs. Frederick Arthur Dodge, jr.

Following the ceremony an informal reception and wedding breakfast was held at the home of the bride.

Finney—Burgess

Lieut. and Mrs. Harry Newcomb Burgess were married on September 4 in the Post Chapel, Camp Forrest, Tenn. Lieutenant Colonel Nixon and Lieutenant Jackson, chaplains, officiated at the ceremony.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, George Finney of Petersburg, Va. Ralph E. Burgess of Washington was his brother's best man. Captain Abbott, Captain Breed, Lieutenant Joseph and Lieutenant Maloney were the ushers. A reception was held following the wedding.

Mrs. Burgess, daughter of Robert Gordon Finney, is the former Miss Margaret DeLashmutt Finney and resided in Washington before moving to Santa Fe, N. Mex., a few years ago. Lieutenant Burgess attended George Washington University and the National Law School. He practiced law in Washington before entering the Army. The bridegroom's mother, Mrs. Eveline Newcomb Burgess, of this city, attended the wedding. After a short wedding trip the bride and groom will make their home in Tullahoma, Tenn., where Lieutenant Burgess, a member of the Army Medical Corps, is now stationed.

Meyer—Di Francesco

Lieut. Gilbert Arndt Meyer, Signal Corps, AUS, and Mrs. Meyer, who were married recently at the home of the bride, left following a wedding reception for the Adironracks on their honeymoon and will return to Washington to make their home.

Mrs. Meyer is the former Miss Justina Di Francesco, daughter of Mrs. Antimo Di Francesco and the late Mr. Di Francesco. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Arndt E. Meyer of Milwaukee, Wis. The Rev. Francis E. Sullivan of St. Francis Xavier Church officiated at the ceremony.

Cities Service Review Plea Denied by SEC

The Securities and Exchange Commission denied yesterday petitions of Cities Service Power & Light Co., and its subsidiary, Federal Light & Traction Co., asking a rehearing on an August 17 order for divestment of properties under the geographic simplification section of the Holding Company Act.

Cities Service and its subsidiary asked leave on August 23 to introduce further evidence to indicate control of the properties results in substantial economies and that the combination systems is not so large as to impair localized management, efficient operation or effectiveness of regulation.

The petitions allege that the commission's findings of fact are not supported by substantial evidence and that it had erroneously construed certain clauses of the "death sentence" section under the act.

The rehearing was denied, the SEC's order said, because "no useful purpose would be served by granting a rehearing on these matters. . . . No particular defects in our findings are pointed out, no parts of the record are alluded to in support of the claims of error, and, in general, it is apparent that this part of the petition has been filed merely as a formal step preliminary to seeking judicial review."

Patriotic Booklet Issued

An attractive booklet with patriotism as its theme is being distributed by the First Federal Savings & Loan Association. A reminder of the debt we owe to the Heroes of Yesterday, the booklet contains reproductions of a series of noncommercial advertisements which appeared weekly in The Washington Post for five months.

Sponsored by First Federal, a contest to stimulate interest and pride in American history was conducted in conjunction with the series. The booklet, as well as the series, is stirring considerable favorable comment in the financial district.

Shoe Inventory Ordered

All shoe establishments were notified by the Office of Price Administration yesterday that they must take inventory of rationed shoes as of the close of business September 30. The stock-taking applies to retailers, distributors, jobbers and manufacturers.

When shoe rationing was begun, dealers were required to report their inventories at six-month intervals. This would have brought the second inventory deadline to October 10. OPA said the new date announced yesterday was ordered so that the inventory would fall at a month's end and thus conform to usual business procedure.

Tax Aid for PCA Workers

Recognizing the difficulties faced by warworkers in filling out the new pay-as-you-go income tax blanks, Pennsylvania-Central Airlines yesterday announced that a special group of its employes had been trained to assist other employes in making the September 15 returns. The service is being given free to the nearly 2,000 employes of PCA—the only airline with general headquarters in Washington.

Stockholders Approve Standard Brands Plan

New York, Sept. 10 (AP).—Stockholders of Standard Brands, Inc., approved a recapitalization plan which will reduce outstanding common shares from 12,648,108 to 3,162,027.

James S. Adams, president, said 350,000 preferred shares would remain unchanged but common stock would be limited to 5 million shares against 20 million now authorized.

Butter Output Slumps

Chicago, Sept. 10 (AP).—Butter production for the week ended September 4 totalled 7,634,498 pounds, a decrease of 12.52 per cent from the 8,726,998 pounds of the corresponding week last year, the American Butter Institute reported today. The total was 6.96 per cent below production of the previous week.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Sept. 10 (AP).—Grain futures held up with difficulty today after a good start, and price changes were mixed and fractionally all the close.

Oats hit new seasonal highs on September and December at 75½ and 72¾, respectively, on good cash demand, and wheat opened higher due largely to the strength at Winnipeg. Profit-taking and other liquidation then cut the prices down. The fact that Adolf Hitler was due to speak just after market closing time also caused some traders to even up accounts.

Wheat closed off to ¼ up, September, 1.46½@1.46¾; December, 1.47⅞@1.47¾; oats were ⅛ higher to ⅛ lower; September, 74½, and rye was up ¼ to off ⅛; September, 1.02⅝.

TERRY AND THE PIRATES — Green Light for a Tourist — By Milton Caniff

ALTHOUGH I NEED SEE THE JUNGLE BEFORE I ESCAPE FROM EENDO-CHINA I FORM THE ESPIONAGE SEESTEM TO KEEP AN EYE ON THE JAPO-NEES..
MY FRIENDS ARE STEEL EEN EENDO-CHINA...THEY AWAIT THE COMEENG OF THE AMEREECAN BOMBAIRS-AND WEEL BENDEECATE THE TARGETS NEETH SEECNALS!
THAT IS WHAT THE GENERAL HAD IN MIND...
CAPTAIN, COULD YOU POINT OUT SOME OF THE LIKELY TARGETS?
BUT OF COURSE, MON COLONEL...
THE PAPERS YOU ASKED FOR, SIR...

MARY WORTH'S FAMILY — By Dale Allen

GOSH, MR. TOWERS! I'VE BEEN PAINTED AND PHOTOGRAPHED SO OFTEN IN THE PAST FEW WEEKS, MY FACE FEELS LIKE A WORN-OUT RUBBER STAMP!
THERE PROBABLY ARE A FEW GOOD IMPRESSIONS LEFT, PATTI...!
IN FACT, IF I WEREN'T A MARRIED MAN--AND A HATER OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN, I'D LIFT A PRINT MYSELF...!
BUT, ENOUGH OF TENDER ROMANCE!-- YOU'VE DONE YOURSELF, THE TOWERS AGENCY AND QUEEN'S TASTE "COSMETICS PROUD!
DOESN'T IT THRILL YOU TO KNOW THAT SOON YOUR LIKENESS WILL ILLUMINATE THE MOST DISTANT CORNERS OF THIS BENIGHTED LAND?
FOR SOME REASON, MR. TOWERS-- IT-- IT FRIGHTENS ME!

MICKEY FINN — Satisfactory Report — By Frank Leonard

WELL, I GUESS OUR LITTLE PLAYMATES HAVE FINALLY GONE TO BED, MICKEY!
YEAH—BUT WE CAN'T DO ANY RELAXING NOW, TOM! WE'VE GOT TO KEEP EACH OTHER AWAKE—SO WE WON'T MISS THE SUB'S SIGNAL!
IT'S EXACTLY MIDNIGHT NOW!
—AND THERE'S THE FLASH!
—SO WE THINK THE PLANTATION UP NEAR LA VITA IS THE SECRET NAZI BASE, SIR!
FINE WORK, MEN! NOW GET SOME SLEEP! YOU'LL BE GOING ASHORE AGAIN—NEAR LA VITA!

MR. AND MRS. — When the Proofs Came Home — By Arthur Folwell and Ellison Hoover

WHAT YOU GOT THERE?
OH, JUST PROOFS OF SOME PICTURES I HAD TAKEN. AND THEY'RE TERRIBLE!
WHY I THINK THEY'RE SWELL—BEST YOU EVER HAD TAKEN
HOW CAN YOU SAY SO? DON'T YOU SEE HOW IMPOSSIBLE MY NOSE LOOKS?
COME TO THINK OF IT, YOUR MOUTH, TOO. I WASN'T GOING TO SAY ANYTHING, BUT—
WHAT'S WRONG WITH MY MOUTH? I THOUGHT THE MOUTH WAS PRETTY GOOD DIDN'T YOU CALL ME DOWN JUST NOW FOR NOT AGREEING WITH YOU?
YES, BUT YOU NEEDN'T HAVE CHANGED YOUR MIND SO CHEERFULLY. I DON'T THINK THESE PROOFS ARE BAD AT ALL

DIXIE DUGAN — Seeking a Change — By J. P. McEvoy and H. J. Striebel

THANKS FOR THE ADVICE, MA—I'LL LOOK FOR A JOB TODAY
BUT—THINK IT OVER VERY CAREFULLY—
SAY TO YOURSELF, "HOW CAN I BEST HELP MY GOVERNMENT"—GOOD LUCK—
SEE YOU LATER
HOW CAN I BEST HELP MY GOVERNMENT?
HOW CAN I BEST HELP MY GOVERNMENT?
WHAT CAN I DO BEST???

DON WINSLOW OF THE NAVY — Victory Garden Romance — By Frank Martinek

THANKS, MY BOY! YOU'VE GIVEN ME OUR FIRST CLUE!
SIR, IF I'VE HELPED, IT'S MY DUTY!
WHY THIS IS MORE COMPLICATED THAN I THOUGHT. BUT I HAVE AN IDEA...
150C
FOR THE LOVE OF HEAVEN, DO YOU SEE WHAT I DO?
YES, THE COUNTRY GENTLEMAN HAS FOUND A MATE.
CON...I MEAN VIC MARTIN MEET MARIE ELLEN—WE'VE BEEN FIXIN' A VICTORY GARDEN!
AND MORE TROUBLE FOR YOU I'M AFRAID!

BIG CHIEF WAHOO — By Saunders and Woggon

PRINCE GREGOR--WHY WAS I INVITED TO THE ROVANIAN EMBASSY BALL?
I WANTED YOU! I HAVE ADMIRED YOU FOR WEEKS!
BUT--YOU--A PRINCE BRINGING A PLAIN OFFICE GIRL!--MY ROOMMATE HINTED--!
YOU ARE FAR FROM PLAIN MY DEAR LADY! AND--AFTER ALL--YOU ARE A PRINCESS!
MY TITLE IS FROM AN INDIAN TRIBE--WHILE YOURS---!
PLEASE! MAY I BE FRANK? YOUR TITLE IS MORE NOBLE THAN MINE! IN ROVANIA, EVERY MAN WHO OWNS A YOKE OF OXEN IS A COUNT--I ALSO OWNED A PLOW!--SO I WAS MADE A PRINCE! I AM THE ONE WHO IS BEING HONORED, PRINCESS!

DONALD DUCK — The Lesser Evil — By Walt Disney

ACME PARACHUTE CO.
THE GYPSIES ARE COMING BACK WITHOUT OUR HORSE, KING!
KID, THAT MEANS CHIEF THREE HORN HAS ACCEPTED THEIR PROPOSITION! THIS IS BAD!
TOMORROW, DIABLO, WITH THE INDIANS' HELP WE WILL HUMBLE THOSE HAUGHTY RANCHERS, NO?
YES, SIRE! WE'LL SHOW THEM! G'NIGHT!
YOU TOLD SIRE OF OUR MOUNTIE PRISONER?
SIRE MUST NOT KNOW THE MAN EE'S A MOUNTIE!
--I WILL TAKE AWAY HIS UNIFORM-- THEN, BOBO, YOU SHALL SEE HOW THE SERGEANT FITS INTO MY PLAN OF REVENGE!
GEE!

KING OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED — By Zane Grey

RIGHT AROUND HOME — By Dudley Fisher

I GUESS OUR DOORBELL DOESN'T WORK!
SAMPSON IS GOOD AT THINGS LIKE THAT. MAYBE HE CAN FIX IT!
I ALWAYS LOOK FIRST IN THE BASEMENT!
YOU TELL US IF IT RINGS!
THAT'S FINE—ONLY NOW IT RINGS ALL THE TIME!
WHERE'S SAMPSON?

JOE PALOOKA — Out of It — By Ham Fisher

OHHH--- I'LL GET IT.
CHOE--- CHOE--- I AM HERE---
WHERE--- WHERE AM I, MIKE?
HE IS OUT OF HIS DELIRIUM--OHH! THANK THE LORD---
YOU BEEN NADA HOUSE--HOW YOU FEEL CHOE?
I--I'M FREE--WHERE DO YOU SAY I AM---
EEN NADA HOUSE--DE GIRL--- NADA.

JANE ARDEN — Flora Goes Into Her Act — By Monte Barrett and Russell Ross

SEE WHO'S AT THE DOOR!
QUICK—GET INTO BED—REMEMBER YOU'RE AN INVALID!
IS THIS WHERE OSCAR MARKS LIVES?
IF IT'S A BILL YOU'D BETTER NOT GIVE IT TO ME—POOR FATHER IS SO SICK, I DON'T WANT TO WORRY HIM WITH ANYTHING LIKE THAT—
OH!
OH!
I CAN'T PAY ANY BILLS YET—I WAS HURT IN AN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—AS SOON AS I'M ABLE I'LL GET A JOB—THEN I'LL PAY YOU—PLEASE DON'T WORRY FATHER!
BUT I DIDN'T COME HERE TO COLLECT A BILL—
